

Über dieses Buch

Dies ist ein digitales Exemplar eines Buches, das seit Generationen in den Regalen der Bibliotheken aufbewahrt wurde, bevor es von Google im Rahmen eines Projekts, mit dem die Bücher dieser Welt online verfügbar gemacht werden sollen, sorgfältig gescannt wurde.

Das Buch hat das Urheberrecht überdauert und kann nun öffentlich zugänglich gemacht werden. Ein öffentlich zugängliches Buch ist ein Buch, das niemals Urheberrechten unterlag oder bei dem die Schutzfrist des Urheberrechts abgelaufen ist. Ob ein Buch öffentlich zugänglich ist, kann von Land zu Land unterschiedlich sein. Öffentlich zugängliche Bücher sind unser Tor zur Vergangenheit und stellen ein geschichtliches, kulturelles und wissenschaftliches Vermögen dar, das häufig nur schwierig zu entdecken ist.

Gebrauchsspuren, Anmerkungen und andere Randbemerkungen, die im Originalband enthalten sind, finden sich auch in dieser Datei – eine Erinnerung an die lange Reise, die das Buch vom Verleger zu einer Bibliothek und weiter zu Ihnen hinter sich gebracht hat.

Nutzungsrichtlinien

Google ist stolz, mit Bibliotheken in partnerschaftlicher Zusammenarbeit öffentlich zugängliches Material zu digitalisieren und einer breiten Masse zugänglich zu machen. Öffentlich zugängliche Bücher gehören der Öffentlichkeit, und wir sind nur ihre Hüter. Nichtsdestotrotz ist diese Arbeit kostspielig. Um diese Ressource weiterhin zur Verfügung stellen zu können, haben wir Schritte unternommen, um den Missbrauch durch kommerzielle Parteien zu verhindern. Dazu gehören technische Einschränkungen für automatisierte Abfragen.

Wir bitten Sie um Einhaltung folgender Richtlinien:

- + Nutzung der Dateien zu nichtkommerziellen Zwecken Wir haben Google Buchsuche für Endanwender konzipiert und möchten, dass Sie diese Dateien nur für persönliche, nichtkommerzielle Zwecke verwenden.
- + Keine automatisierten Abfragen Senden Sie keine automatisierten Abfragen irgendwelcher Art an das Google-System. Wenn Sie Recherchen über maschinelle Übersetzung, optische Zeichenerkennung oder andere Bereiche durchführen, in denen der Zugang zu Text in großen Mengen nützlich ist, wenden Sie sich bitte an uns. Wir fördern die Nutzung des öffentlich zugänglichen Materials für diese Zwecke und können Ihnen unter Umständen helfen.
- + Beibehaltung von Google-Markenelementen Das "Wasserzeichen" von Google, das Sie in jeder Datei finden, ist wichtig zur Information über dieses Projekt und hilft den Anwendern weiteres Material über Google Buchsuche zu finden. Bitte entfernen Sie das Wasserzeichen nicht.
- + Bewegen Sie sich innerhalb der Legalität Unabhängig von Ihrem Verwendungszweck müssen Sie sich Ihrer Verantwortung bewusst sein, sicherzustellen, dass Ihre Nutzung legal ist. Gehen Sie nicht davon aus, dass ein Buch, das nach unserem Dafürhalten für Nutzer in den USA öffentlich zugänglich ist, auch für Nutzer in anderen Ländern öffentlich zugänglich ist. Ob ein Buch noch dem Urheberrecht unterliegt, ist von Land zu Land verschieden. Wir können keine Beratung leisten, ob eine bestimmte Nutzung eines bestimmten Buches gesetzlich zulässig ist. Gehen Sie nicht davon aus, dass das Erscheinen eines Buchs in Google Buchsuche bedeutet, dass es in jeder Form und überall auf der Welt verwendet werden kann. Eine Urheberrechtsverletzung kann schwerwiegende Folgen haben.

Über Google Buchsuche

Das Ziel von Google besteht darin, die weltweiten Informationen zu organisieren und allgemein nutzbar und zugänglich zu machen. Google Buchsuche hilft Lesern dabei, die Bücher dieser Welt zu entdecken, und unterstützt Autoren und Verleger dabei, neue Zielgruppen zu erreichen. Den gesamten Buchtext können Sie im Internet unter <http://books.google.com> durchsuchen.

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

NYPL RESEARCH LIBRARIES

3 3433 08811883 5

ZDK
Butler

THE
L I V E S
OF THE Primitive Fathers, Martyrs, AND OTHER PRINCIPAL SAINTS:

COMPILED FROM
ORIGINAL MONUMENTS, AND OTHER AUTHENTIC RECORDS:

ILLUSTRATED WITH THE REMARKS OF JUDICIOUS MODERN CRITICS AND HISTORIANS.

BY THE REV. ALBAN BUTLER.

THE THIRD EDITION.
IN TWELVE VOLUMES.

VOL. V.

EDINBURGH:

PRINTED BY J. MOIR, PATERSON'S COURT;
FOR J. P. COGLAN, NO. 37. DUKE-STREET, GROSVENOR-SQUARE, LONDON; AND F. COATES, NEWCASTLE.

1799.

211K

Repair No. 670/03

NON
S
V

C O N T E N T S.

M A Y.

	Page
1. S. PHILIP, Apostle	1	S. Gybrian of Irel. Priest 131
S. James the Less, Apostle	5	9. S. Gregory Nazianzen, B. C.
S. Asaph, B. C.	9	132
S. Marcou or Marculfus, Ab.	10	His Writings
S. Sigismund, King, M.	ib.	S. Hermas
S. Andeolus, Martyr	12	S. Nicholas, B. C.
S. Brieuç, B. C.	13	S. Brynoth, B. C.
S. Amator, B. C.	14	10. S. Antonius, B. C.
SS. Acius and Acheolus, MM.	ib.	159
2. S. Athanasius, Patriarch of Alexandria, D.	15	His Writings
Life and Writings of Lucifer, Bishop of Cagliari	35	Achard, Bp. of Avranches
On the Writings of S. Athanasius	42	SS. Gordian, and Epimachus, MM.
3. Invention of the Holy Cross	45	167
S. Alexander, Pope, M.	55	S. Isidore, patron of Madrid
4. S. Monica, Widow	56	S. Comgall, Abbot in Irel.
S. Godard, B. C.	66	S. Cataldus, Bishop
5. S. Pius V. Pope, C.	67	11. S. Mammertus, B. C.
Knights of Malta, &c.	71	176
S. Hilary, B. C.	82	S. Maieul, Abbot of Cluni, C.
S. Angelus, Martyr	89	179
S. Mauront, Abbot	90	12. SS. Nereus and Achilleus, MM.
S. Avertin, C.	92	181
6. S. John before the Latin Gate	ib.	S. Flavia Domitilla, V. M.
S. John Damascen, Father of the Church	97	S. Pancras, M.
His writings	101	S. Epiphanius, B. C.
S. Eadbert, B. C.	104	His Writings
7. S. Stanislas, B. M.	106	S. Germanus, Bishop
S. Benedict II. Pope, C.	111	S. Rictudes, Abbes
S. John of Beverly, B. C.	113	S. John the Silent, B. C.
Life and Writings of Alcuin, Deacon of York	115	S. Peter Regalati, C.
8. Apparition of S. Michael, Arch-Angel	118	S. Servatius, Bishop
S. Peter, Bishop	125	14. S. Boniface, M.
S. Victor, Martyr	130	199
S. Wiro, Bp. in Irel.	131	S. Pachomius, Abbot
S. Odrian, Bp. in Irel.	ib.	S. Pontius, M.
		S. Carthagh or Mochudu, B. in Irel.
		ib.
		15. SS. Peter, Andrew, &c. MM.
		213
		S. Dympna, V. M.
		216
		S. Genebrard or Genebern, M. in Irel.
		217
		16. S. John Nepomucen, M.
		ib.
		S. Simon Stock, C.
		229
		S. Ubaldus, Bishop
		232
		S. Honoratus, B. C.
		236

S. Abdjesus, or Hebedjesus, B. M.	236	S. Urban, P. M.	329
S. Abdas, Bishop	ib.	S. Aldhem, Bishop	ib.
S. Brendan the Elder, Abbot Irel.	237	S. Gregory VII. Pope, C.	331
17. S. Paschal Baylon, C.	238	His Writings	337
S. Possidius, B. C.	244	SS. Maximus and Venerand, MM.	338
S. Maden, or Madern, C.	245	S. Dumhade of Irel. Abb.	340
S. Maw, C.	248	26. S. Philip Neri, C.	341
S. Cathan, B. C.	249	Lives and Writings of Cardinal Berulle, F. Condren, F. Bourguoin, F. Le Jeune, F. Eudes, F. Bernard, and Sister Mary of the Incarn- ation	356
S. Silave, or Silan, B. C. in Irel.	ib.	S. Augustine, Apostle of Eng- land, B. C.	362
18. S. Eric, K. M.	ib.	S. Eleutherius, Pope, M.	384
SS. Theodotus, &c. MM.	252	S. Quadratus, B. C.	388
S. Venantius, M.	264	S. Oduvald, Abbot, C.	390
S. Potamon, B. M.	ib.	27. S. John, Pope, M.	391
19. S. Peter Celestine, P. C.	265	Life and Writings of Boëtius	392
S. Pudentiana, V.	273	S. Bede, C. Father of the Church	398
S. Dunstan, B. C.	ib.	His Writings	401
20. S. Bernardin of Sienna, C.	280	S. Julius, Martyr	412
His Works	287	28. S. Germanus, B. C.	413
S. Ethelbert, K. M.	288	S. Carauhus or Caro, M.	421
B. Yvo, B. C.	290	29. S. Maximinus, B. C.	422
His Writings	292	S. Cyril, M.	423
21. S. Felix, C.	294	S. Conon and his Son, MM.	424
S. Godric, Hermit	301	SS. Sisinnius, Martyrius, and Alexander, MM.	426
S. Hospitius or Sospis, R.	303	30. S. Felix, I. Pope, M.	427
22. S. Yvo, C.	304	S. Walstan, C.	429
S. Basiliscus, B. M.	309	S. Ferdinand III. K. C.	439
SS. Castus and Æmilius, MM.	ib.	S. Moguil	438
S. Bobo, C.	ib.	31. S. Petronilla, V.	439
S. Conall, Abb. in Irel.	ib.	SS. Cantius, Cantianus, and Cantianilla, MM.	441
23. S. Julia, V. M.	310
S. Desiderius, B. M.	311
S. Desiderius, B. M.	312
24. S. Vincent of Lerins, C. ib.
SS. Donatian and Rogatian, MM.	316
S. John of Prado, M.	319
25. S. Mary of Pazzi, V.	320

MAY I.

ST PHILIP, APOSTLE.

ST PHILIP was of Bethsaida in Galilee, and called by our Saviour to follow him (1) the day after St Peter and St Andrew (a) He was at that time a married man, and had several daughters; (b) but his being engaged in the married state hindered him not, as St Chrysostom observes, from meditating continually on the law and the prophets, which disposed him for the important discovery of the Messias in the person of Jesus Christ, in obedience to whose command he forsook all to follow him, and became thenceforth the inseparable companion of his ministry and labours. Philip had no sooner discovered the Messias, than he was desirous to make his friend Nathanael a sharer in his happiness, saying to him: We have found him of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets did write, that

(1) Jo. i. 43.

(a) St Clement of Alexandria relates, as a thing well known, that St Philip was the person, who, when called by our Lord, begged leave to go home first and bury his father; which occasioned the reply: Follow me, and let the dead bury their dead. By which words Christ meant not to condemn duties of that kind, but gave the disciple to understand, that, being called to the highest spiritual functions, these were to be preferred to corporal works of mercy.

(b) Some of these, as St Clement of Alexandria testifies, (Strom. 1. 3. p. 418.) he settled in marriage. But two of them lived always virgins to a great age, and were buried at Hierapolis, as we learn from Polycratés, quoted by Eusebius (b. 2. c. 31.) Sozomen relates, (l. 7. c. 27.) that one of them raised a dead man to life; and Papias says, (Eus. hist. 1. 3. c. 39.) that he heard this miracle from their own mouths, though not as wrought by them. Polycrates mentions a third daughter of great sanctity, probably married, buried at Ephesus, and calls these three sisters the Lights of Asia:

is, the Messiah, Jesus, the son of Joseph, of Nazareth. Nathanael was not so ready to give his assent to this assertion of his friend, by reason that the supposed Messiah was reported to be of Nazareth. Philip therefore desired him to come himself to Jesus and see; not doubting but, upon his personal acquaintance with the Son of God, he would be as much convinced of the truth as he was himself. Nathanael complied, and Jesus, seeing him approach, said within his hearing: Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom there is no guile. Nathanael asked him, how he came to know him. Jesus replied: Before Philip called thee, when thou wast under the fig-tree, I saw thee. Nathanael, as two holy fathers explain the matter, calling to mind that the closeness of his retirement on that occasion was such, that no human creature could see him, owned him hereupon for the Son of God and the King of Israel, or in other words, the Messiah foretold by Moses and the prophets. The marriage at Cana of Galilee happening three days after, to which Jesus and his disciples were invited, St Philip was present at it with the rest. The year following, when our Lord formed the college of apostles, Philip was appointed one of that number, and from the several passages of the gospel, he appears to have been particularly dear to his divine Master. Thus when Jesus was about to feed 5000 persons who had followed him into the wilderness, for the greater evidence of the miracle, and for the trial of this apostle's faith, Jesus proposed to him the difficulty of feeding the multitudes in that desolate place. (2) And a little before our Saviour's passion, certain Gentiles, desirous to see Christ, made their first address to Philip, and by him and St Andrew obtained that favour. Our Saviour, in the discourse he made to his disciples immediately after his last supper, having promised them a more clear and perfect knowledge of his heavenly Father, than they had had hitherto, St Philip cried out with an holy eagerness and impatience: Lord, shew us the Father, and it sufficeth us. From which words our Saviour took occasion to inculcate afresh a steady belief of his divinity, and perfect equality with the Father, saying: So long a time have I been with you, (teaching you who I am, both by my words and actions,) and have you not known me? (If you beheld me with the eyes of faith such as I really am, in seeing me you would see the Father also, because) I am in the Father, and the Father is in me. (3)

(2) Jo. vi. 5.

After our Lord's ascension, the gospel was to be preached to the whole world by a few persons, who had been eye-witnesses of his miracles, and were enabled, by the power of the Holy Ghost, to confirm their testimony concerning him by doing the like wonderful works themselves. That this might be accomplished, it was necessary that the disciples should quickly disperse themselves into all parts of the world. St Philip accordingly preached the gospel in the two Phrygias, as Theodoret and Eusebius assure us from undoubted monuments. St Polycarp, who was only converted in the year 80, enjoyed his conversation for some time, (4) consequently St Philip must have lived to a very advanced age. It appears from a passage of Polycrates, quoted by Eusebius, (5) that he was buried at Hierapolis in Phrygia, which city was indebted to his relicks for its preservation by continual miracles, as is averred by the author of the sermon on the twelve apostles, attributed to St Chrysostom. (6) An arm of St Philip was brought from Constantinople to Florence in 1204, whereof we have an authentic history in the Bollandists. The orientals keep his festival on the fourteenth of November; the Latins, on the first of May, with St James. His body is said to be in the church of SS. Philip and James, in Rome, which was dedicated to God under their name in 560. The emperor Theodosius, in a vision, received, from St John the Evangelist and St Philip, the assurance of victory over the tyrant Eugenius the morning before the battle, in 394, as Theodoret relates. (7)

From St Philip we must particularly learn an ardent love of God, and desire to see the Father. He asked only this favour, because this was his only desire. Is it ours? Do we feel it so perfect as to extinguish all inordinate earthly affections and desires in our breasts? Do we employ the proper means to attain to this happy disposition? To obtain it let us employ the succour of this apostle's prayers, and, by disengaging our hearts from corruption and vanity, become in desires and affections citizens of heaven. The pilgrim soul sees herself a stranger here on earth, and discovers nothing in this desert place of her banishment, but an abyss of vanity, and subjects of compunction, grief and fears. On the other side, looking up to God, she contemplates the magnificence and splendor of his kingdom which will have no end; its peace, security, sanctity without stain, delights without sorrow, unchangeable and incomprehensible joys; and she cries out in a holy transport: O joy surpassing all joys, and without which there is no true joy, when shall I possess you! O sovereign Good, discover to me some ray of thy beauty and of thy glory; may my heart be set on flame by thy love, and my soul languish and waste with desire to be united to thee, to behold thee face to face, to sing thy praises night and day, to drink of the plenty of thy house, and of the torrent of thy delights, to be for ever confirmed in thy love, and in some measure transformed into thee! Such a soul seeks to hide herself from the eyes of men, to live unknown to the world, and in retirement and repose to apply herself to prayer, all her thoughts being taken up in contemplating the glorious things which are said of the blessed city of her God. All worldly enjoyments and distractions are insupportable to her, and she finds no comfort in this place of banishment, but in singing the praises of her God, in adoring and in doing always his will, and in the sweet sighs and tears with which she seeks him, and begs him to reign perfectly in her affections by his grace and love, and to draw her speedily to himself out of this Babylon, in which every object increases her affliction, and inflames her desire, seeming to say to her: Where is thy God?

(3) Jo. xiv. (4) See Tillemont, T. 1. p. 384, (5) B. 3. c. 31. (6) T. 8. Ed. Ben. (7) B. 5. c. 24.

 ST JAMES THE LESS, APOSTLE.

See Tillemont, T. 1. p. 405. Ceillier, T. 1. p. 422.

ST JAMES, to distinguish him from the other apostle of the same name, the son of Zebedee, was called the Less; which appellation is supposed to have taken its rise, either from his having been called later to the apostleship than the former, or from the lowness of his stature, or from his youth. He is also known by the title of James the Just, a denomination all agree, with Hegesippus, (1) and St Clement of Alexandria, to have been given on account of his eminent sanctity. He was the son of Alpheus, (a) and Mary the sister of the Blessed Virgin, and seems to have been born some years before our Lord. Jesus came with his brethren, and probably St James among the rest, to settle in Capharnaum at the beginning of his ministry. (2) James and his brother Jude were called to the apostleship in the second year of Christ's preaching, soon after the Pasch in the year 31. He was favoured with an extraordinary apparition of his Master after

(1) B. 2. c. 1. 23.

(2) John ii. 12.

(a) Some take Alpheus and Cleophas to be only different names for the same person. Others are of opinion, that Cleophas was Mary's father, or perhaps she married Cleophas after the death of Alpheus. Joseph, called in the original text Jose, was a brother of St James and son of Mary (Mark xv. 40.) St Jude styles himself his brother. (Jude i.) He had also a brother called Simon, the same with Simeon, son of Cleophas and bishop of Jerusalem, whose life was given on the eighteenth of February. These were called our Lord's brethren, according to the use of that word among the Jews, which extends it to all near relations. They had also sisters: St Epiphanius names two, Mary and Salome. The sons of Cleophas were likewise cousins-german to our Saviour by St Joseph his reputed father: for Hegesippus assures us that Cleophas was brother of St Joseph. Cleophas was himself a disciple of Christ, who going to Emmaus with another disciple, was favoured with the apparition related, Luke xxiv. He is honoured in the Roman martyrology the twenty-fifth of September; and Mary his spouse, who had followed and served Christ in Galilee, and attended him in his passion and burial, on the ninth of April.

his resurrection. (3) Clement of Alexandria says that Christ being risen from the dead, communicated the gift of science (4) to SS. James the Just, John and Peter, and that they imparted it to the other apostles. We are told by SS. Jerom (5) and Epiphanius, (6) that our Lord, at his ascension, recommended his church of Jerusalem to St James; in consequence whereof the apostles, before their dispersion, constituted him bishop of that city. It was probably for a mark of his episcopal authority, and as an ensign of his dignity, that he wore on his head a lamine or plate of gold, as is recounted by St Epiphanius (7). Polycrates, quoted by Eusebius, (8) testifies, that St John did the same: others relate the like of St Mark. It was probably done in imitation of the Jewish high-priest.

St James governed that church in perpetual dangers from the fury of the people and their violent persecutions; but his singular virtue procured him the veneration of the Jews themselves. As to his sanctity Eusebius (9) and St Jerom (10) give from Hegesippus the following account concerning him. "He was always a virgin, and was a Nazarite or one consecrated to God. In consequence of which he was never shaved, never cut his hair, never drank any wine or other strong liquor; moreover he never used any bath or oil to anoint his limbs, and never eat of any living creature except when of precept, as the paschal lamb; he never wore sandals, never used any other clothes than one single linen garment. He prostrated so much in prayer, that the skin of his knees and forehead was hardened like to camels hoofs. St Epiphanius says (11), that in a drought, on stretching out his arms to heaven, he by his prayers instantly obtained rain. His eminent sanctity made even the Jews stile him the just man: and Origen observes, (12) that Josephus himself gives him that epithet, though it is not to be found now in Josephus's works. The same reverence for his person procured him the privilege of entering at pleasure into the Sanctum or Holy place, namely that part of the temple, where none but the priests were allowed by the law to enter. (13) St Jerom adds, (14) that the Jews strove out of respect who should touch the hem of his garment. In the year 51, he assisted at the council of the apostles, held at Jerusalem about the observance of circumcision, and the other legal ceremonies of the law of Moses. Here, after having confirmed what St Peter said, he devised the sentence which the apostles drew up on that occasion. (15) This apostle being bishop of a church, which then chiefly consisted of Jewish converts, tolerated the use of the legal ceremonies (16), and together with others advised St Paul to purify himself and offer sacrifice. (17) He is the author of a canonical epistle which he wrote in Greek. It is at the head of those called catholic or universal, because addressed, not to any one particular church, but to the whole body of the converted Jews dispersed throughout the then known world. It was penned some time after those of St Paul to the Galatians, in 55, and to the Romans in 58. It could not therefore be written before the year 59, fourteen years after the death of St James the greater. The author's view in this epistle is to refute the false teachers, who, abusing certain expressions in St Paul's writings, pretended that faith alone was sufficient to justification without good works: whereas without these, he declares our faith is dead. He adds excellent precepts of a holy life, and exhorts the faithful not to neglect the sacrament of extreme-unction in sickness.

(3) 1 Cor. xv. 7. (4) Τὴν γνῶσιν, Eus. b. 2. c. 1. (5) In Gal. p. 164. (6) Hær. 87. (7) Hær. 29. (8) Eus. b. 3. c. 24. (9) B. 2. c. 23. (10) In Jovin. b. 2. c. 24. (11) Hær. 78. (12) Orig. in Cels. l. 1. p. 35.

The oriental liturgy or mass, which bears the name of this apostle, is mentioned by Proclus patriarch of Constantinople, and by the council in Trullo, and is of venerable antiquity. (b) St Basil indeed testifies

(13) Heges apud Eus. ib. (14) In Galat. i. 19. (15) Act^s xv. (16) Gal. ii. 11. (17) Acts xxi. 17.

(b) See Le Brun, Sur les liturgies.

(18.) that the words of the sacred invocation in the consecration of the bread and of the cup, were not committed to writing, but learned and preserved by tradition down to the fourth century, which was done from a motive of respect and veneration; but other parts of the liturgy were written. Perhaps St James gave only general directions about this liturgy, upon whose plan it was afterwards drawn up or enlarged. His singular learning in sacred matters is extolled by St Clement of Alexandria (19) and St Jerom. (20)

The Jews being exasperated at the disappointment of their malicious designs against St Paul, by his appeal to Cæsar, to whom he was sent by Festus in the year 60, were resolved to revenge it on St James. That governor dying before the arrival of his successor Albinus, this vacancy gave them an opportunity of acting more arbitrarily than otherwise they durst have done. Wherefore during this interval, Ananus the high-priest, son of the famous Annas mentioned in the gospels, having assembled the Sanhedrim or great council of the Jews, summoned St James and others before it. Josephus the Jewish historian says, (21) that St James was accused of violating the laws, and delivered to the people to be stoned to death. And Hegesippus adds, (22) that they carried him up to the battlements of the temple, and would have compelled him from thence to make a public renunciation of his faith in Christ, with this further view, thereby to undeceive, as they termed it, those among the people who had embraced Christianity. But St James took that opportunity to declare his belief in Jesus Christ after the most solemn and public manner. For he cried out aloud from the battlements, in the hearing of a great multitude, which was then at Jerusalem on account of the passover, that Jesus the Son of man was seated at the right hand of the sovereign majesty, and would come in the clouds of heaven to judge the world. The Scribes and Pharisees, enraged at this testimony in behalf of Jesus, cried out: "The just man also hath erred." And going up to the battlements, they threw him headlong down to the ground, saying, he must be stoned. St James, though very much bruised by his fall, had strength enough to get upon his knees; and in this posture lifting up his eyes to heaven, he begged of God to pardon his murderers, seeing that they knew not what they did. The rabble below received him with showers of stones, and at last a fuller gave him a blow on the head with his club, such as is used in dressing of cloths, after which he presently expired. This happened on the festival of the Pasch, the tenth of April, in the year of Christ 62, the seventh of Nero. He was buried near the temple in the place in which he was martyred, where a small column was erected. Such was the reputation of his sanctity, that the Jews attributed to his death the destruction of Jerusalem, as we read in St Jerom, (23) Origen, (24) and Eusebius, (25) who assure us that Josephus himself declared it in the genuine editions of his history. Ananus put others to death for the same cause, but was threatened for this very fact by Albinus, and deposed from the high-priesthood by Agrippa. The episcopal throne of St James was shewn with respect at Jerusalem in the fourth century. His relicks are said to have been brought to Constantinople, about the year 572.

(18) L. de Spir. S. c. 27. (19) Apud Eus. l. 2. c. 1. (20) L. contra Cels. (21) Ant. l. 20. (22) Apud Eus. l. 2. c. 23.

ON THE SAME DAY.

St ASAPH, Bishop. C. St Kentigern bishop of Glasgow, in Scotland, being driven from his own see, founded a monastery and episcopal chair on the banks of the river Elwy in North Wales. Bishop Usher writes from John of Tinmouth, that in this abbey 965 monks served God in great continence. Three hundred, who were illiterate, this holy abbot appointed to till the ground, and take care of the cattle: other 300 to do necessary work within the monastery; and 365 he deputed to celebrate the divine office. These last never went out of the monastery, unless upon some urgent necessity, but attended continually (23) In Jovin. b. 1. c. 24.

Matt. p. 223.

(24) Contra Cels. l. 1. and in
(25) Eus. Hist. l. 1. c. 23.

in God's sanctuary, being divided into companies, one of which began the divine office in the choir as another had finished it and went out, as among the Acæmetes at Constantinople: by this means, the divine praises suffered no interruption in the church. Among these monks St Asaph shone as a bright light, most illustrious for his birth, virtues, and miracles. When St Kentigern was called back to Glasgow, he appointed St Asaph, the most distinguished for learning and piety among his disciples, abbot and bishop at Llan-Elwy. Our saint was a diligent preacher, and had frequently this saying in his mouth: "They who withstand the preaching of God's word, envy the salvation of men." St Asaph wrote certain canons or ordinances of his church, the life of St Kentigern, and some other works. He died about the close of the sixth century; for he flourished about the year 590. From him the see of Elwy took the name of St Asaph's: though it continued long vacant; for we find no mention of any other bishop of St Asaph's before the twelfth century, when Geoffrey of Monmouth was advanced to that episcopal chair. Wharton gives him a predecessor named Gilbert. See Le Neve's Fasti, p. 20. Dr Brown Willis, and principally Leland de Script. Angl.

St MARCÔU, or MARCULFUS, abbot of Nanteu, in the diocess of Coutances in Normandy, famous for miracles, especially in healing the scrophulous disorder called the king's evil. He died on the 1st of May in 558, and is honoured in the martyrologies of Coutances, Evreux, &c.

St SIGISMUND, king of Burgundy, M. Wonderful is the providence of God, in the means by which he preserves his elect from the contagion of vice, and conducts them to eternal life. This saint was son of Gondobald; the Arian king of the Burgundians, but embraced the Catholic faith through the instructions of St Alcimius Avitus, bishop of Vienne. (a) He succeeded

(a) The Burgundians were a principal tribe of the Vandals, as Pliny and Zozimus assure us, and is farther proved in the late history of Burgundy to the kingdom of his father in 516, and in the midst of barbarism lived humble, mortified, penitent, devout and charitable, even on the throne, a station in which

Burgundy, and in l'Essai sur les premiers Rois de Bourgogne & sur l'Origine des Bourgoignons, a Dijon, 4to. 1771. They are first met with on the banks of the Vistula in Prussia; when Procopius wrote, on this side of the Elbe below the Thuringi: In 407, they passed the Rhine into Gaul, and under their first king Gondicaire, in 413, conquered the country betwixt the Upper Rhine, the Rhone, and the Saone, where they settled their kingdom, and shortly after extended its limits, so that it comprised what was afterwards the dutchy of Burgundy, the Franche Comte, Provence, Lyonnais, Dauphine, Savoye, &c. with the cities Geneva, Lyons, Autun, Basil, Nevers, Grenoble, Besancon, Langres, Viviers, Embrun, Vienne, Orange, Carpentras, Apt, &c. Gondicarius, the first king of the Burgundians, reigned 50 years, from 413 to 463, as appears from his letter to pope Hilary, and that pope's answer, in which he styles him his Son, &c. Chilperic, his son, succeeded him, was a zealous Catholic prince; but having reigned about 28 years, was assassinated with his wife, two sons and brother Godomor, by his ambitious brother Gondebald, who had embraced the Arian heresy. After a reign of 25 years, he died in 516, leaving two sons, Sigismund and Godomar. He reformed the code of the Burgundian laws, called from him Loi Gombette. His brother Chilperic's two daughters were brought up at his court at Geneva: Chrono the eldest took the religious veil, Clotildis the second was married to Clovis, king of the Franks, who waged war against him, to revenge the murder of Chilperic, and besieged him in Avignon, but afterward made peace with him. Clodomir, king of Orleans, with his brothers, renewed this war against St Sigismund, whom he took and caused to be drowned at Orleans in 524. Clodomir pursued his brother and successor Godomar; but was defeated by him and slain. Ten years after Clotaire and Childebert vanquished him in 533, from which time the ancient kingdom of Burgundy was divided among the kings of the Franks. Among these Gontran, son of Clotaire I. took the title of king of Burgundy, and reigned at Chalons sur Saone, though his brother Sigebert possessed a large part of that country. Childebert son of Sigebert in 523, and Thierrri II. the son of Childebert in 506, bore the same title. After the death of the latter in 613, Burgundy lost its title of a kingdom in the hands of the French monarchs; but was revived for a short time in Charles, youngest son of the emperor Lothaire, with the title of king of Provence, afterward of Arles. Upper Burgundy was called Franche Comte, because it owed only military service.

We find the Burgundians Christians and Catholics under Gondicaire soon after they had crossed the Rhine, and were settled in France. From Zozomen it appears, that their conversion happened about the year 317. Those moderns who imagine them infected with Arianism almost as soon as they were Christians, are entirely mistaken. For it is manifest from Socrates, Nicephorus, Orosius, &c. that they remained the very name of true virtue is too often scarce known. Before the death of his father he built the famous monastery of St Maurice at Agaune, in the Valais, in the year 515, where many holy hermits lived before that time in scattered cells. God permitted this good prince to fall into a snare. He suffered his son Sigeric to be put to death, upon an accusation forged by his second wife of a conspiracy against his life: but afterwards discovering the calumny, and pierced to the quick with remorse, he retired to Agaune, where he did penance in tears and sackcloth. He made it his prayer to God that he might be punished in this life, to escape the divine vengeance in the next. His prayer was heard. For being taken prisoner by Chlodimir, the barbarous king of the Franks, he was, by his order, drowned in a well at Columelle, four leagues from Orleans, after he had reigned one year. His body was kept honourably at Agaune, till it was removed to the cathedral of Prague by the emperor Charles IV. (1) It has been famous for many miracles. See St Gregory of Tours, Hist. Fr. l. 3. c. 5. & 6. and Henschenius's Collections, T. I. Maij. p. 83.

St ANDEOLUS, M. He was a disciple of St Polycarp, preached the gospel in Gaul, and received the crown of martyrdom at Bergoiate upon the Rhone, his head being sawn asunder with a wooden saw, by an order of the emperor Severus, in his march through Gaul for Britain, in the year 208. (b) The town of St Andiol in Vivarez is possessed of the treasure of his relics. See Bosquet, part. 2. Hist. Eccles. Gallic. p. 91. Henschenius, p. 35.

(1) On this translation see Henschenius, T. I. Maij. p. 88.

remained zealous Catholics above a century and half after their conversion to Christianity: not only to the year 440, fixed by Tillemont, but down to 491. They fell into Arianism only in the close of that century, and remained attached to that heresy no longer than about 20 years, during the reign of Gondebald, their third king. See Abregé Chronologique de l'Hist. Eccl. Civile & liter. de Bourgogne par M. Mille. 8vo. 1770.

(b) At the request of St German, bishop of Paris, king Childebert founded at Paris the chapel of St Andeol, which he subjected to the abbey

St BRIEUC, in Latin BRIOCUS, B. C. He was of an illustrious extraction in Great Britain, a native of the province called Coriticia, which some take for Ceretia, now Cardiganshire: others for the Coretans, situated on the Trent, now in Staffordshire and Derbyshire: others will have it to be Cornwall. His father was called Cerpus, and his mother Eldrude. (c) St Germanus of Auxerre, coming into Britain in 429, St Brieuc, then about 20 years of age, became his disciple, and followed him back to France, where he was some time after promoted to priest's Orders. Returning afterward into his own country, he converted his parents, and with their liberal assistance built a famous church called Grande-Lann, and there trained up a great number of disciples. Several years after he passed into Armorica, where he landed at Achm, perhaps in the country of Achk, in the bishopric of Leon. In the territory of Treguier, he converted from a worldly life, a wealthy nobleman named Conan, by whose liberality he was enabled to build a monastery in the Northern part of Armorica, which he governed some years. At length, appointing another abbot of the numerous community which he had formed, he repaired to his relation and friend prince Riwallon, or Rigald, anciently prince of Domnonia in Britain. This prince, who had lately settled with a colony of his British subjects in part of Armorica, gave to the saint an house and parcel of lands, where he built a monastery and a church, which was afterward dedicated to God under the patronage of St Stephen. The saint took upon him the government of this monastery, and departed to God in peace, about the year 502, being upwards of 90 years old. His legend mentions not his episcopal chaabbey of St Vincent, now St Germain-des-Pres. This chapel afterward became a great parochial church under the title of St Andrew's Des Arcs, in Latin De Arcubus, because it was built with arches, a thing formerly very extraordinary. It is sometimes corruptly called St Andre des Arts. St Andeol is still honoured in it as primitive titular patron.

(c) Eldrude is not only a Saxon name, as Henschenius pretends, but also British from Ell, the reduplicative preposition, and Drud which signifies illustrious or well beloved.

acter, but he is styled a bishop in an inscription on a marble stone found in his shrine in 1210. He seems to have been ordained a regionary bishop before he left Britain. The monastery of St Briec, which was then grown into a considerable town, was only erected into a bishopric in 844. The relicks of St Briec, during the invasion of the Normans, were translated to the abbey of St Sergius at Angers in 866, but a portion was restored to St Briec's in 1210. See Dom Lobineau, Vies des Sts. de la Bretagne, p. 11. who recovered great part of his acts, which Henschenius was not able to meet with. T. 1. Maij. p. 81.

St AMATOR, Bishop of Auxerre, C. He served God from his infancy with his whole heart, and applied himself to the study of the sacred sciences under Valerian, bishop of Auxerre. In compliance with the desires of his parents, he took to wife Martha, a rich young lady of Langres; but no sooner was the contract solemnized in the church, but taking her aside, he spoke to her in such strong terms, on the advantages of holy virginity, that, by her free consent, they on the spot engaged themselves, by a mutual vow, to embrace that state for the sake of more perfect virtue. She soon after took the religious veil, and he received the clerical tonsure. Being afterwards chosen bishop of Auxerre, he governed that church thirty years, from 388 to 418, labouring to conduct his flock by his example and assiduous exhortations, in the paths of eternal salvation. He died on the 1st of May 418. See his life, and that of St Germanus and other monuments collected by Henschenius, T. 1. Maij. p. 50.

SS. ACIUS and ACHEOLUS, called in French SS. ACH and ACHEUL, Martyrs of Amiens. They seem to have suffered about the year 290, and are honoured in the Gallican martyrologies, and especially at Amiens, on the 1st of May. See Molanus in Auctario Usuardi, and Henschenius 1st of May, and an old martyrology under the name of St Jerom, quoted by him.

The church of St Acheul, without the walls of Amiens, was originally the cathedral; but this being removed by St Salvius to our Lady's in the city, the church of St Acheul became dependent on it. A community of regular canons was there erected in 1145. It is now a member of the reformed congregation of St Genevieve. In digging foundations for a new church, five very ancient tombs were found, which have been the subject of many dissertations, especially whether one is not that of St Firminus, bishop and confessor, whose relicks are enshrined in the cathedral.

M A Y II.

ST ATHANASIUS, PATRIARCH OF ALEXANDRIA,
DOCTOR OF THE CHURCH.

From his works, and the fathers and historians of that age. See his life by Hermant, who first cleared up the intricate history of Arianism. See also Tillemont, Ceillier, Orsi, the Benedictin editors of this father, and Combesis, Bibl. Concionat p. 500 ad 530.

A. D. 373.

ST GREGORY NAZIANZEN begins with these words his panegyric of this glorious saint, and champion of the faith. (1) "When I praise Athanasius, virtue itself is my theme: for I name every virtue as often as I mention him who was possessed of all virtues. He was the true pillar of the church. His life and conduct were the rule of bishops, and his doctrine the rule of the orthodox faith." St Athanasius was a native of Alexandria, and seems to have been born about the year 296. His parents, who were Christians, and remarkable for their virtue, were solicitous to procure him the best education. After he had learned grammar, and the first elements of the sciences, St Alexander, before he was raised to the episcopal chair of that city, was much delighted with the virtuous deportment of the youth, and with the pregnancy of his wit; and took upon himself the direction of his studies, brought him up under his own eye, always made him eat with him, and employed him as his secretary. Athanasius copied diligently the virtues of his master, imbibed his maxims of piety and holy zeal, was directed by him in the plan and method of his studies, and received from him the greatest assistance in the pursuit of them. By writing under so great a master, he acquired the most elegant, easy and methodical manner of composition. Profane sciences he only learned as far as they were necessary, or might be rendered subservient to those that are more sublime and important : but from their aid he contracted an elegant, clear, methodical and masterly style ; and was qualified to enter the lists in defence of our holy faith with the greatest advantage. However, the sacred studies of religion and virtue he made the serious employment of his whole life : and how much he excelled in them, the sequel of his history and perusal of his works shew. From his easy and ready manner of quoting the holy scriptures, one would imagine he knew them by heart ; at least, by the assiduous meditation and study of those divine oracles, he had filled his heart with the spirit of the most perfect piety, and his mind with the true science of the profound mysteries which our divine religion contains. But in his study of the sacred writings, the tradition of the church was his guide, which he diligently sought in the comments of the ancient doctors, as he testifies. (2) In another place he declares, that he had learned it from holy inspired masters, and martyrs for the divinity of Christ. (3) That he might neglect no branch of ecclesiastical learning, he applied himself diligently to the study of the canons of the church, in which no one was more perfectly versed ; nor was he a stranger to the civil law, as appears from his works ; on which account Sulpicius Severus styles him a lawyer.

(1.) Or. 21.

Achillas, who had succeeded St Peter in the patriarchal see of Alexandria, dying in 313, St Alexander was promoted to that dignity. (a) The desire of grounding himself in the most perfect practice of virtue, drew

(2) Orat. contra gentes. p. 1. (3) L. de Incarn. p. 66.

(a) The hearsay story of St Athanasius baptizing certain children at play; is inconsistent with the evident chronology of his history ; as

St Athanasius into the deserts to the great St Antony, about the year 315; with whom he made a considerable stay, serving him in quality of a disciple, and regarding it as an honour to pour water on his hands when he washed them (4). When he had by his retreat prepared himself for the ministry of the altar, he returned to the city, and, having passed through the inferior degrees of ecclesiastical orders, was ordained deacon about the year 319. St Alexander was so much taken with his prudence, virtue and learning, that he desired to have him always with him, and governed his flock by his advice. He stood much in need of such a second, in defending his church against the calumnies and intrigues of the schismatics and heretics. The holy patriarch St Peter had, at the intercession of the martyrs and confessors, dispensed with the rigour of the canons in behalf of certain persons, who through frailty had fallen into idolatry during the persecution, and upon their repentance had received them again to communion. Meletius, bishop of Lycos in Thebais, unjustly took offence at this lenity, and on that pretence formed a schism over all Egypt against St Peter and his successors. Arius, a Lybian by birth, and a deacon, who for seditious practices was expelled the church by his bishop St Peter, fell in with Meletius. St Peter was so well acquainted with his turbulent spirit, that no entreaties could move him, even when he was going to martyrdom, to receive him into the communion of the church. However, his successor Achillas, upon his submission and repentance, not only admitted him into his communion, but also ordained him priest, and entrusted him with the church of Baucalis, one of the parishes of the city. Achillas was succeeded by St Alexander, whose promotion Arius resented as an injury done to himself, being in his own opinion the more worthy: and some time after impudently and is shewn by Hermont, Tillcmont, &c. It is only grounded on the authority of Rufinus, who on other accounts is acknowledged to be a careless writer.

(4) Athan. Vit. Anton. p. 794.

blasphemously asserted that Christ was not God but a mere creature, though formed before all other created beings, (but not from eternity) and of a nature superior in perfection to all other creatures. St Alexander long endeavoured by mildness to reclaim the heresiarch, but was compelled by his obstinacy to cut him off from the communion of the church, in a synod of all the bishops under his jurisdiction, held at Alexandria. Arius fled first into Palestine, and thence to Nicomedia, where he had already gained by letters the confidence of Eusebius, the crafty bishop of that city. In 319, St Alexander sent an account of his proceedings against Arius in a circular letter directed to all the bishops of the church, signed by St Athanasius and many others. In 325, he took the holy deacon with him to the council of Nice, who there distinguished himself by the extraordinary zeal and learning, with which he encountered not only Arius, but also Eusebius of Nicomedia, Theognis and Maris, the principal protectors of that heresiarch; and he had a great share in the disputations and decisions of that venerable assembly, as Theodoret, Sozomen, and St Gregory Nazianzen, testify.

Five months after this great council St Alexander, lying on his death-bed, by a heavenly inspiration recommended to his clergy and people the choice of Athanasius for his successor, thrice repeating his name; and when he was found to be absent, he cried out: "Athanasius, you think to escape, but you are mistaken (5)." Sozomen says he had absconded for fear of being chosen. In consequence of this recommendation the bishops of all Egypt assembled at Alexandria, and finding the people and clergy unanimous in their choice of Athanasius for patriarch, they confirmed the election about the middle of the year 326; for St Cyril testifies (6), that he held that chair 46 years. He seems then to have been about 30 years of age. He ordained Frumentius bishop of the Æthiopians, and made the visitation of the churches under his jurisdiction throughout all Egypt. The Meletians continued, after the death of their author, to hold private assemblies, ordain new bishops by their own authority, every where to divide the people, and to fill Egypt with factions and schisms. In vain did St Athanasius employ all the power which his authority put into his hands, to bring them back to the unity of the church. The severity of their morals gained them a reputation among the people, and their opposition to the Catholics moved the Arians to court their friendship. Though these schismatics were in the beginning orthodox in faith, and the first and most violent opposers of Arius, yet they soon after joined his partisans in calumniating and impugning St Athanasius; for which purpose they entered into a solemn league of iniquity together. For St Athanasius observes, (7) that as Herod and Pontius Pilate forgot their enmity to agree in persecuting Christ, so the Meletians and Arians dissembled their private animosities, to enter into a mutual confederacy and cabal against the truth: which is the spirit of all sectaries, who, though divided in every other thing, unite in persecuting the truth, and opposing the church.

(5) Sozomen, b. 2. c. 17. Theodoret, b. 2. c. 26. (6) Ep. I.

Arius being recalled from banishment, into which he had been sent by the emperor, St Athanasius refused him entrance into the church; whereupon he retired to his friends in Palestine and the neighbouring eastern provinces, at whose entreaty Constantine urged St Athanasius to admit him to his communion. The intrepid patriarch answered the emperor, that the Catholic church could hold no communion with heresy, that so impudently attacked the divinity of Jesus Christ. (8) Eusebius of Nicomedia and Theognis, after three years banishment, seeing Arius already released from his exile, wrote a letter to the emperor, which is extant in Socrates and Sozomen, artfully declaring that they all agreed in faith, that they received the word consubstantial, having now fully examined its meaning, and that they entirely gave themselves up to peace; but could not anathematize Arius, whom, by a long converse with

(7) Or, 1. contr. Arian. Socr. 1. 2. c. 22.

(8) Apol. contra Arian. p. 178. and

him, and both by word and writing, they had found not to be guilty of what had been laid to his charge, and who had already met with a favourable reception from his imperial majesty. Hereupon the sentence of their banishment was reversed, and they were both permitted to return to their respective sees. This Eusebius had before ambitiously procured his translation from the see of Berytus to that of Nicomedia, which being at that time the residence of the eastern emperors, gave him a fair opportunity of ingratiating himself with the great ministers of state, and thereby of rendering himself considerable for power and interest at court. He neither wanted parts nor learning, was of a subtle and daring temper, a deep dissembler, and the most artful of men; and on these accounts a proper instrument of the devil to be the contriver of the calumnies and persecutions against our saint and the Catholic church. He was no sooner come back to Nicomedia, than he began to set his engines at work. He first wrote a civil letter to St Athanasius, wherein he endeavoured to justify Arius. But neither his own flattering words, nor the emperor's threats, which he procured, prevailing, he wrote to the Meletians, that the time was now come to put their designs in execution, and impeach Athanasius. It was some time before they could agree what they should lay to his charge. At length they sent three of their schismatical bishops, Isio, Eudæmon and Callinicus, to Nicomedia, who undertook to accuse him to the emperor of having exacted linen for the use of his church, and imposed it as a tribute upon the people; also of sending a purse of gold to one Philumenus, who was plotting to usurp the empire. Athanasius being summoned to appear before Constantine, his cause was heard in his palace of Psammathia, situated in the suburbs of Nicomedia. The emperor, having examined the accusations against him, was convinced of his innocence, acquitted him of what had been alleged against him, and sent him back with a letter to the faithful of Alexandria, wherein he calls him a man of God, and a most venerable person.

Eusebius, though baffled for the present, did not despair of compassing his ends; and in the mean time contrived the banishment of St Eustathius, the most zealous and holy patriarch of Antioch. And soon after new allegations were laid against Athanasius, charging him with the murder of Arsenius, a Meletian bishop, and with other crimes. Constantine appeared shocked at the accusation of the murder, and sent an order to St Athanasius to clear himself in a council which was to be held at Cæsarea in Palestine, whereof Eusebius, one of the Arian party, was bishop. The saint, disliking it no doubt on this account, and justly apprehensive he should not have liberty allowed him for his defence, did not appear. This his enemies represented to Constantine as the effect of pride and stubbornness; who, being exasperated by these suggestions, began to entertain an ill opinion of him, and appointed another council to assemble at Tyre, where he commanded Athanasius at his peril to appear. The council met there in August 335, consisting of 60 bishops, chiefly Arians. St Athanasius, after some delay, came thither attended with a considerable number of bishops of his own province, and among these, the illustrious confessors Paphnutius and Potamon. All the chiefs of the Arian sect were present; the two Eusebius's, Flacillus the intruded bishop of Antioch, Theognis of Nice, Maris of Chalcedon, Narcissus of Neronias, Theodorus of Heraclea, Patrophilus of Scythopolis, Ursacius of Syngidon, Valens of Mursa, and George of Laodicea. The just exception which St Athanasius made against such judges, who had declared themselves his enemies, was tyrannically over-ruled, and, on his entering the council, they, instead of allowing him to take his place among them, obliged him to stand as a criminal at the bar before his judges. St Potamon could not forbear tears upon the occasion, and addressing himself to Eusebius of Cæsarea, who had been a prisoner with him for the faith in the late persecution, cried out: "What, Eusebius, are you sitting on the bench, and doth Athanasius stand arraigned? Who can bear this with patience? Tell me; was not you in prison with me during the persecution? As for my part, I lost an eye in it, but I see you are whole and sound. How came you to escape so well?" By which words he insinuated a suspicion of public fame, that Eusebius had been guilty of some unlawful compliance. The rest of the Egyptian bishops persisted in refusing to allow those to be judges of their patriarch, who were his professed enemies; but their remonstrances were not regarded.

The first article of accusation against the saint was, that Macarius, his deputy, had been guilty of sacrilege in breaking the chalice of one Ischyras, a supposed priest, whilst he was officiating at the altar. This, which had been already proved to be mere calumny, was further confuted by deputies sent from Tyre into Egypt to examine into the state of the affair, whereby it appeared that the whole charge was groundless and malicious, and that Ischyras, who at length was reconciled to St Athanasius, had been set on by certain bishops of the Meletian faction. He was next accused of having ravished a virgin consecrated to God; and a woman was accordingly prevailed with to own and attest the fact in open council. Whereupon Timothy, one of the saint's clergy, turning to her: "Woman," said he, "did I ever lodge at your house, did I ever, as you pretend, offer violence to you?" "Yes," said she, "you are the very person I accuse:" adding at large the circumstances of time and place. The imposture thus plainly discovering itself, put the contrivers of it so much out of countenance, that they drove her immediately out of the assembly. St Athanasius indeed insisted on her staying, and being obliged to declare who it was that had suborned her; but this was overruled by his enemies, alleging that they had more important crimes to charge him with, and such as it was impossible to elude by any artifices whatsoever. They proceeded next to the affair of Arsenius, an old Meletian bishop, whom they accused St Athanasius of having murdered. To support this charge they produced in court a dried hand, supposed to be the hand of Arsenius, which, as they alleged, the patriarch had ordered to be cut off, to be employed in magical operations. The truth was: Arsenius, styled by his party bishop of Hypsele, had fallen into some irregularity, and had absconded. St Athanasius had first procured certificates from many persons that he was still living; and prevailed with him afterwards, through the interest of friends, to come privately to Tyre, to serve St Athanasius on this occasion. The saint therefore asked if any of the bishops present knew Arsenius: several answering, they did; he then made him appear before the whole assembly with both his hands. Thus was the wicked purpose of his adversaries defeated, no less to the pleasure and satisfaction of the innocent, than to the shame and confusion of the guilty. Arsenius soon after made his peace with St Athanasius, and with the catholic church; as did also John, the most famous of the Meletian bishops. The Arians called the saint a magician, and one that imposed upon their senses by the black art; and would have torn him to pieces, had not the imperial governor interposed and rescued him out of their hands, who for further security sent him on board a ship that sailed the same night. Having thus escaped their fury, he went soon after for Constantinople. All these particulars are related by St Athanasius in his apology: also by Socrates, Sozomen, and Theodoret. Though the saint had been convicted of no crime, the Arian bishops pronounced against him a sentence of deposition, forbidding him to reside at Alexandria, lest his presence should excite new disorders there, repeating in their sentence the calumnies which had been so fully refuted.

Constantine, who had refused to see or give audience to our saint on his arrival at Constantinople, whom he looked upon as justly condemned by a council, sent an order to the bishops of Tyre to adjourn to Jerusalem, for the dedication of the church of the holy sepulchre, which he had caused to be built there. Arius came thither at this time to the council, with a letter from the emperor, and a profession of faith which he had presented to him, and which is extant in Socrates. In it the subtle heretic professes his belief in Christ, "as begotten before all worlds: God the Word, by whom all things were made, &c." But neither the word consubstantial, nor any thing equivalent to it, was there. The heresiarch had assured the emperor that he received the council of Nice, who was thus imposed upon by his hypocrisy; but he ordered the bishops to examine his profession of faith. The Eusebians readily embraced the opportunity which they had long waited for, declared Arius orthodox, and admitted him to the communion. St Athanasius in the mean time having requested of the emperor, who had refused him audience, that his pretended judges might be obliged to confront him, and that he might be allowed the liberty to exhibit his complaints against them, Constantine sent them an order to come to Constantinople to give an account of their transactions at Tyre. But only six, and these the most artful of the number, obeyed the summons, namely, Eusebius, Theognis, Maris, Patrophilus, Ursacius and Valens. These agreed to attack St Athanasius with a fresh accusation, as they did, charging him with having threatened to hinder the yearly transportation of corn from Alexandria to Constantinople. This accusation, though protested against by the saint as absolutely false and to the last degree improbable, was nevertheless believed by Constantine, who expressed his resentment at it, and banished him, in consequence, to Triers, then the chief city of the Belgic Gaul.

The holy man arrived there in the beginning of the year 336, and was received with the greatest respect by St Maximinus, bishop of the place, and by Constantine the younger, who commanded there for his father. St Antony and the people of Alexandria wrote to the emperor in favour of their pastor: but he answered that he could not despise the judgment of a council. (b) The saint had the satisfaction to be in-

(b) St Jerom says (in Chron. ad an. 338.) that Constantine inclined to the Arian doctrine. But St Athanasius and all others, except Lucifer of Cagliari, expressly affirm that he always adhered to the faith of the council of Nice, against which, while he lived, none durst openly appear. When he was deceived by Arius and Eusebius, they always persuaded him that they maintained its decisions. If he sometimes persecuted St Athanasius, it was never for his doctrine or faith; and the Arians forged against him calumnies of another nature, when they endeavoured to exasperate this prince against him. This formed that his church at Alexandria constantly refused to admit Arius. The year after, on Whitsunday the twelfth of May, Constantine departed this life, being sixty-three years and almost three months old, whilst he yet wore the Neophyte's white garment after his baptism. His historian testifies with what ardour the people offered up their prayers to God for his soul. (c) He was buried in the porch of the church of the twelve apostles, which he had founded in Constantinople for the burying-place of the emperors and patriarchs, though he had built that of St Irene for the great church or the cathedral. He would be buried in that

This emperor was baptised in his last sickness by Eusebius of Nicomedia; but that crafty Arian did not openly discover his heresy to him, enjoyed at that time the communion of the catholic church, and was the diocesan of the castle of Aguyron, where he received the sacraments from his hands. He had shewn great zeal for the extinction of that heresy in the council of Nice. His devotion and sincere piety, his extraordinary zeal for the Christian religion, and for the peace of the church, his respect for priests, &c. the many wholesome laws which he made in favour of religion, and the great sentiments of piety in which he received baptism and the other sacraments, oblige us to excuse some symptoms of vanity in his youth, and with the church to speak of his name with gratitude and respect. His heroic virtues atoned for faults and errors which true repentance blotted out. That he was imposed upon by the artifices of wicked Arian hypocrites, so far as to harbour suspicions against an Athanasius, was an extreme misfortune, which proved favourable to the abettors of heresy, fatal to many, and the ruin of his son Constantius, and of his own sister Constantia. In excuse for Constantine's unjust treatment of St Athanasius, we ought to reflect how often princes are obliged to see with the eyes of others, and how difficult it frequently is to them, when surrounded with flatterers, to come to the knowledge of the truth. But God opened the eyes of this emperor before his death, with regard to the innocence of his holy servant; he accordingly gave orders, in his last illness, that he should be recalled from his banishment, in which he had then lived one year and some months; but as this could not be put in execution before the middle of the year 338, the continuance of his exile was one year and four months.

(c) Innumerabilis populus unâ cum sacerdotibus Dei, non sine gemitu ac lacrymis, pro imperatoris anima preces offerebant Deo, gratissimum pio principi officium exhibentes. In hoc etiam Deus prolixam erga famulum suum benevolentiam declaravit; quippe quod maxime ambierat, locum juxta Apostolorum memoriam ei concesserit, ut animæ illius tabernaculum Apostolici nominis atque honoris consortio fruere- tur, divinisque cæremoniis, ex mystico sacrificio et sanctarum precum communione potiri mereretur. Eus, l. 4. Vit. Const. c. 11. ed. Vales.

holy place, according to Eusebius, "that he might deserve to enjoy the benefit of the mystical sacrifice, and the communion of devout prayers." (9) Constantine's three sons divided the empire, as their father's will directed. Constantine, the eldest, had Britain, Spain, Gaul, and all that lies on this side the Alps: Constantius, the second son, Thrace, Asia, Egypt, and the East: Constans, the youngest, had Italy, Africa, Greece and Illyricum. Constantine, the younger, restored St Athanasius to his see, sending with him a letter filled with high commendations of the holy prelate, and expressions of great respect for his sanctity, and of indignation against his adversaries. The saint passed through Syria, and was received by his flock with a joy and pomp equal to the triumph of an emperor.

The city of Alexandria was situated within the jurisdiction of Constantius, whom the Arians had gained over to their party without much difficulty. These heretics accused St Athanasius afresh to the three emperors, for raising tumults and seditions upon his return, for committing violences and murder, and selling, for his own private use, the corn which Constantine had destined for the support of widows and ecclesiastics, in those countries where corn did not grow; but the attestations of the bishops who had received it in Lybia, justified him, and covered his accusers with confusion. Constantine and Constans sent away their deputies with disgrace: but Constantius, being met at Antioch by Eusebius of Nicomedia and others of his party, was easily persuaded into the belief of this last head of the accusation, and prevailed upon to grant them leave to choose a new bishop of Alexandria. They lost no time, but, assembling at Antioch, named one Pistus to that see, an Egyptian priest of their sect, who, together with the bishop that ordained him, had been condemned by St Alexander and by the council of Nice: but pope Julius rejected his communion, and all other catholic churches pronounced anathemas against him; nor was he ever able to get possession of the patriarchal chair. St Athanasius called a council of about an hundred bishops at Alexandria to defend the catholic faith : after which he repaired to Rome to pope Julius, to whom this council sent letters and deputies. Here the pope acquitted him in a council of fifty bishops, held in 341, and confirmed him in his see : but he was obliged to continue at Rome three years, during which the Arians carried on every thing by violence in the East. The same year a council met at Antioch to the dedication of the great church called the Golden Church, and framed twenty-five canons of discipline. After the departure of the orthodox prelates, the Arians framed a canon levelled against St Athanasius, that if a bishop, who had been deposed in a council, whether justly or unjustly, should return to his church, without the authority of a greater council than that which had deposed him, he should never hope to be re-established, nor have his cause admitted to a hearing. They then named Gregory, a Cappadocian, and placed him by force of arms in the see of Alexandria in 341. The emperor Constans in 345 invited St Athanasius to Milan, and by earnest letters obliged his brother Constantius to join with him in assembling a general council of the East and West at Sardica, in Illyricum. It met in May 347, and consisted of 300 bishops of the West, and 76 of the East, according to Socrates and Sozomen ; but, according to St Athanasius, only of 170, besides the Eusebians ; which agrees nearly with Theodoret, who reckons them in all 250. They were collected out of thirty-five provinces, besides the Orientals. This is reputed a general council, and is proved such by Natalis Alexander, though commonly looked upon only as an appendix to that of Nice. St Athanasius, Marcellus of Ancyra, and Asclepas of Gaza, were acquitted. They and some others out of the eastern empire were present. But the Arian Orientals made a body apart, being fourscore in number, who having formed several assemblies in certain places by the way, on their arrival at Sardica refused, as they had agreed before they came, to join the other prelates, alleging the presence of Athanasius, and other such frivolous pretences; and at length, upon an intimation of the threats of the synod if they did not appear, and if the Eusebians did not justify themselves of the matters laid to their charge, they all fled by night, and held a pretended council at Philippopolis, as St Hilary in his fragments, and Socrates testify. Dr Cave alleges, that they dated their acts at Sardica: but this they did only to usurp the venerable name of that synod: for at the same time they quote the synodal epistle of the prelates who remained at Sardica, before the date of which epistle all historians testify that they had left that city. The true council excommunicated the chiefs of the Eusebians, with Gregory the Cappadocian, forbidding all catholic bishops to hold communion with them. (d) This council sent two deputies to Constantius to press the execution of its decrees. The emperor Constans wrote to him also, both before and after the council, to acquaint him, that unless he restored Athanasius to his see, and punished his calumniators, he would do it by force of arms. Gregory the Cappadocian, who had, with the Arian governors, exercised a most bloody persecution against the catholics, and among others had caused to be beaten to death the holy confessor St Potamon, dying four months after the council of Sardica, facilitated our saint's return to Alexandria, and deprived the emperor of all pretexts for hindering or delaying it. Constantius had also upon his hands an unsuccessful war against the Persians, and dreaded the threats of a civil war from his brother. Therefore he wrote thrice to the holy prelate, entreating him to hasten his return to Alexandria. St Athanasius, at the request of Constans, went first to him, then residing in Gaul, and probably at Milan, and thence to Rome, to take leave of pope Julius and his church. He took Antioch in his way home, where he found Constantius, who treated him with great courtesy, and only desired that he would allow the Arians one church in Alexandria. The saint answered, that he hoped that in that case the same favour might be granted to the Catholics at Antioch, who who adhered to Eustathius: but this not being relished by the Arians, Constantius insisted no longer on that point, but recommended Athanasius in very strong terms to his governors in Egypt. In the mean time, the zealous and pious emperor Constans was treacherously slain by Magnentius in Gaul, in January 350. Nevertheless, Constantius restored Athanasius, who immediately assembled a council at Alexandria, and confirmed the decrees of that of Sardica. St Maximus did the same in a numerous synod at Jerusalem. Many Arian bishops on this occasion retracted their calumnies against the holy man, and also their heresy; among whom were Ursacius and Valens: but they soon returned to the vomit.

(9) De vitâ Constant. l. 4. c. 71.

(d) This council of Sardica decrees that the appeal of a bishop; deposed in his own province, to the bishop of Rome, be always allowed, and that the pope may either refuse to re-examine the cause, if he thinks that superfluous, or depute bishops of a neighbouring province, or send persons from Rome to determine it. (Can. 3. 4. 7) This was no new law; but a confirmation of that which had been established from the beginning; and, as a proof of it, we see that St Athanasius had, before this, appealed to pope Julius, and been acquitted by him at Rome; nor had the Eusebians themselves found fault with the procedure.

Magnentius usurped the empire in Italy, Gaul, and Africa, and Vetrannio in Pannonia. Constantius marched into the West against them. He made himself master of Vetrannio's person by a stratagem, and his army defeated Magnentius near Mursa in Pannonia, in 351, and that tyrant fell soon after by his own sword. Whilst Constantius resided at Sirmium in 351, a council was held in that city, consisting chiefly of oriental bishops, most of them Arians. Photinus, bishop of that see, who renewed the heresy of Sabelius, and affirmed Christ to be no more than a mere man, having been already condemned by two councils at Milan, was here excommunicated, deposed, and banished by the emperor. The profession of faith drawn up in this synod is commonly esteemed orthodox, and called the First Confession of Sirmium. The Arians had never ceased to prepossess the credulous emperor against Athanasius, whose active zeal was their terror ; and that prince was no sooner at liberty, by seeing the whole empire in his own hands, than he began again to persecute him. He procured him to be condemned by certain Arian bishops at Arles, in 353, and again at Milan in 355, where he declared himself his accuser, and banished the catholic bishops who refused to subscribe his condemnation ; as SS. Eusebius of Vercelli, Dionysius of Milan, Paulinus of Triers, &c. He sent a chamberlain to obtain of Pope Liberius the confirmation of this unjust sentence : but he rejected the proposal with indignation, though enforced with presents and threats. Liberius not only refused the presents which were brought him, but when the messenger sought means to deposit them as an offering in St Peter's church, unknown to the pope, he threw them out of doors. Constantius hereupon sent for him under a strict guard to Milan, where, in a conference, recorded by Theodoret, he boldly told Constantius that Athanasius had been acquitted at Sardica, and his enemies proved calumniators and impostors, and that it was unjust to condemn a person who could not be legally convicted of any crime : the emperor was reduced to silence on every article ; but being the more out of patience, ordered him, unless he complied within three days, to go into banishment to Berœa in Thrace. He sent him indeed five hundred pieces of gold to bear his charges ; but Liberius refused them, saying, he might bestow them on his flatterers : as he did also a like present from the empress, bidding the messenger learn to believe in Christ, and not to persecute the church of God. After the three days were expired, he departed into exile, in 356. Constantius going to Rome to celebrate the twentieth year of his reign, in 357, the ladies joined in a petition to him that he would restore Liberius, who had been then two years in banishment. He assented, upon condition that he should comply with the bishops then at court. About this time Liberius began to sink under the hardships of his exile, and his resolution was shaken by the continual solicitations of Demophilus the Arian bishop of Berœa, and of For-tunatian, the temporising bishop of Aquileia. He was so far softened by listening to flatteries and suggestions, to which he ought to have stopped his ears with horror, that he yielded to the snare laid for him, to the great scandal of the church. He subscribed the condemnation of St Athanasius, and a confession or creed which had been framed by the Arians at Sirmium, though their heresy was not expressed in it; and he wrote to the Arian bishops of the East, that he had received the true catholic faith which many bishops had approved at Sirmium. (e) The fall of so great a

(e) Liberius fell by a prevarication and notorious scandal: but not by heresy. There were three confessions of faith or creeds compiled by the Arians at Sirmium. The first, framed in the council of Sirmium, in 351, against Photinus, was orthodox in its terms; though the word consubstantial was omitted in it. This was drawn up by the oriental bishops, who alone composed that council; the West, except Pannonia, being then subject to Magnentius. The second confession was made at Sirmium in 357, when Constantius arrived there from Rome, only Valens, Ursacius, and Germinius are named as concerned in it; and Osius of Cordova, and Potamius of Lisbon, as subscribing to it: for Osius, after most zealously maintaining the faith, was vanquished by tortures, and unhappily fell, but died penitent in Spain, within a year after, as St Athanasius assures us. This second creed openly expressed the Arian impiety, and forbade any mention to be made either of unity or of likeness of substance in Christ with the Father: for the catholics called Christ of the same substance as the Father: the Semi-Arians of like substance; the Anomæans or rank Arians, entirely unlike in substance: the last mentioned were also called Eunomians, from one of the chief of that sect. In 359, a third confession was published by the Arians at Sirmium, in which Christ is said to be alike in substance in all things. This third contains clearly the Semi-Arian heresy, and was made two years after the fall of Liberius. Nor could he have subscribed the second, of which the very authors of it were immediately ashamed, so that it was no more mentioned; and it was framed by very few, and those all western bishops. Whereas St Hilary testifies, (Fragm. 6. p 1357.) that Liberius signed the confession which had been made by twenty-two bishops, of which number Demophilus was one, which agrees to the first. Hence Liberius, writing to the oriental bishops, says he had signed their confession of faith, or that made by them, and that it was presented to him by Demophilus. He moreover calls it catholic. All which circumstances concur in the first. Sozomen assures us (l. 4. c. 15.) that when he arrived at Rome, he anathematized all who did not confess the Son like to the Father in all things, which was expressly condemning the second creed. How then could he have subscribed to it so short a time before?

prelate, and so illustrious a confessor, is a terrifying example of human weakness, which no one can call to mind without trembling for himself. St Peter fell by a presumptuous confidence in his own strength and resolution; that we may learn that every one stands only by humility. Liberius however speedily imitated the repentance of the prince of the apostles. And he no sooner had recovered his see, than he again loudly declared himself the patron of justice and truth: and when the council of Rimini was betrayed into a prevarication, which was construed in favour of Arianism, Liberius vigorously opposed the danger, and by his strenuous active zeal averted the desolation with which it threatened many churches, as Theodoret testifies. (10)

Constantius, not content to have banished the bishops who favoured Athanasius, also threatened and punished all the officers and magistrates who refused to join in communion with the Arians. Whilst his presence in the West filled it with confusion and acts of tyranny, St Athanasius was at Alexandria, offering up to God most fervent prayers for the defence of the faith. Constantius next turned all his rage against him and against the city of Alexandria, sending orders to Syrianus, the duke, that is, general of the troops of Egypt, to persecute the archbishop and his clergy. He likewise dispatched two notaries to see his orders executed. They endeavoured to oblige the saint to leave the city. He answered, that he had returned to his see, and had resided there till that time by the emperor's express order; and therefore could not leave it, without a command of equal authority (which they owned was not in their power to produce,) or unless Syrianus, the duke, or Maximus, the prefect or governor, would give him such an order in writing, which neither of them would do. Syrianus, convinced of the justice of his plea, promised to give neither him nor the public assemblies of his people any further disturbance, without express injunction from the emperor to that effect. Twenty-three days after this solemn promise, confirmed by oath, the faithful were assembled at the church of St Theonas, where they passed the night in prayer on account of a festival to be celebrated the next day. Syrianus, conducted by the Arians, surrounded the church at midnight with above 500 soldiers, who having forced open the doors, committed the greatest disorders. The patriarch however kept his chair, and being determined not to desert his flock in their distress, ordered a deacon to sing the 136th psalm, and the people to repeat alternately : For his mercy endureth for ever. After this, he directed them to depart, and make the best of their way to their own houses, protesting that he would be the last that left that place. Accordingly, when the greatest part of the people were gone out, and the rest were following, the clergy and monks that were left forced the patriarch out along with them ; whom (though almost stifled to death) they conveyed safe through the guards and secured him out of their reach. Numbers on this occasion were trampled to death by the soldiers, or slain by their darts. This relation is given by the saint in his apology for his flight, and in his history of the Arians, addressed to the monks. The next step of the Arians was to fix a trusty man of their party in this important see : and the person they pitched upon was one George, who had been victualler to the army, one of the most brutish and cruel of men : who was accordingly placed in the patriarchal chair. His roughness and savage temper made him seem the fittest instrument to oppress the catholics ; and he renewed all the scenes of bloodshed and violence of which Gregory had set the example, as Theodoret relates. Our holy bishop hereupon retired into the deserts of Egypt : but was not permitted to enjoy long the conversation of the devout inhabitants of those parts, who, according to the expression of St Gregory Nazianzen, lived only to God. His enemies having set a price upon his head, the wildernesses were ransacked by soldiers in quest of him, and the monks persecuted, who were determined rather to suffer death than to discover where he lay concealed. The saint, apprehensive of their suffering on his account, left them, and retired to a more remote and solitary place, where he had scarce air to breathe in, and saw none but the person that supplied him with necessaries, and brought him his letters, though not without great danger and difficulty. (f)

(10) Theodoret, Hist. l. 2. c. 17.

Constantius died on the third of November in 361; a prince whose memory will be eternally infamous for his heresy, and persecution of the church, his dissimulation, levity, and inconstancy, his weakness of mind, and the treacherous murder of all his uncles. The year following, George, the Arian usurper of the see of Alexandria, was massacred by the pagans for his cruelty. Thus was Athanasius delivered from all his chief enemies. Julian the apostate, on coming to the empire, granted all the bishops who had been banished by Constantius, the liberty to return to their respective churches; not out of any good will he bore them, but with a view, as his own historian writes, to increase their divisions by this licence, and lessen his fears of their uniting against him: also to reflect an odium on the memory and proceedings of his predecessor. Most of the orthodox bishops took their advantage of this permission; and the usurper of the see of Alexandria being massacred by the pagans in July 362, our saint returned to his flock in August, after an absence of above six years. His entrance was a kind of triumph of the catholic faith over its enemies, and the citizens hereupon drove the Arians out of all the churches.

In 359, the council of Rimini had the weakness so far to yield to the artifices of the Arians, as to omit in the creed the word consubstantial. The prelates were afterwards surprised to see the triumph of the Arians on that account, and were struck with remorse for their unwary condescension. Their fall was owing, not to any error in faith, but to a want of courage and insight into the artifices of the Arians. Nevertheless, Lucifer of Cagliari, (g) and some other bishops pretended, by a pharisaical pride, that the lapsed, not-

(f) This seems to have given occasion to the fable of Rufinus, that the saint lived several years hidden in the bottom of a well: a circumstance which would not have been omitted either by the saint himself, or by St Gregory Nazianzen.

(g) Lucifer, bishop of Cagliari, the metropolis of Sardinia, distinguished himself for his contempt of the world, and his zeal against the Arians. This he exerted with great warmth in the defence of St Athanasius in the council of Milan in 355, first in the great church, afterward in the palace of the emperor Constantius, and in his presence: for which he was banished to Germanica in Syria, of which city Eudoxus, one of the most implacable chiefs of the Arian heresy, was bishop. From thence Lucifer was some time after removed into Palestine, to Eleutheropolis, Eutychius, bishop of that see, being also an Arian. There he wrote his first book against Constantius, which he was bold enough to send to that emperor, and afterward to confess himself the author of it to Florentius, great master of the palace, who was ordered by the emperor to put the question to him. In this book he shews that the emperor ought not to intermeddle in ecclesiastical matters; and he compares him with the worst of tyrants. In his 2d book against Constantius he justifies St Athanasius. St Jerom and other fathers commend his writings against Constantius, but it were to be wished that his terms had been more respectful. By a fresh order of this emperor, the place of his banishment was again changed, and he was removed into Thebais in Egypt, where he remained till the death of Constantius. In his book, On Apostate Kings, he shews that wicked tyrants have often enjoyed worldly prosperity, which Constantius thought a proof in himself that he was favoured by heaven. Lucifer's other books, On not sparing Sinners, or on the obligation of boldly reprovng them: On not communicating with Heretics, and that we are to die for the Son of God, are wrote with the same harshness of style.

The trophies which Lucifer gained by his zeal were blasted by the scandal of an unhappy schism to which he gave birth. After the death of Constantius, Lucifer repaired to Antioch with St Eusebius of Vercelli. St Eustathius, the bishop of Antioch, whom the Arians had banished, being then dead, the election of St Meletius was canonical; yet some catholics rejected it because the Arians had joined in choosing him. The catholics had continued to adhere to their bishop St Eustathius during his banishment: after his death those who schismatically separated themselves from the communion of Meletius were called Eustathians, and Lucifer arriving at Antioch put himself at their head, ordained Paulinus their bishop, and separated himself from the communion of St Eusebius, because he disapproved the ordination of Paulinus. Thus Lucifer laid the foundation of the fatal schism at Antioch. Another schism of which he was the author was still more notoriously unjust, and carried by him to greater lengths. St Athanasius in his famous council at Alexandria in 362, allowed that the bishops who at Rimini had been drawn into the snare of the Arians, and into an omission favourable to their heresy, and all others who had been engaged in a like fault, should upon withstanding their repentance, could no longer be admitted by the church to communion in the rank of bishops or priests. St Athanasius, on the contrary, being filled with the spirit of tenderness which our Divine Redeemer exercised and recommended to be shewn towards sincere penitents, condemned this excessive severity: and in 362 assembled a council at Alexandria; at which assisted St Eusebius of Vercelli, in his return from his banishment in Thebais, St Asterius of Petra, &c. This synod condemned those who denied the divinity of the Holy Ghost, and decreed that the authors of the Arian heresy should be deposed, and upon their repentance received only to the lay-communion; but that those prelates who had fallen into it only by compulsion, and for a short time, should upon their repentance retain their sees. This decision was adopted in Macedonia, Achaia, Spain, Gaul, &c. and approved at Rome. (11) For we learn from St Hilary, that Liberius, who died in 366, had established this discipline in Italy, and we have his letter to the catholic bishops of that country, in which he approves what had been regulated in this regard in Achaia and Egypt, and exhorts them to exert their zeal against the authors of their fault, in proportion to the grief they felt for having committed it. (12)

(11) Conc. T. 7. p. 73. and 680.
p. 1357. Constant. ep. decret. 13, p. 448.

(12) St Hil. fragm. 12.

their repentance be suffered to retain their sees. This indulgence so far displeased Lucifer that he refused to communicate with those penitent bishops, and with those who received them, that is, with the pope and the whole catholic church. Many were engaged with him in this schism, at Antioch, at Rome, in several other parts of Italy, in Egypt and Palestine, but chiefly in Sardinia and Spain. The author survived 9 years after his return to Cagliari, and seems to have continued obstinate to his death, which happened in 371, according to St Jerom in his chronicle. The ancients only reproach him with the crime of his schism, so that we are to understand of his followers what Theodoret says, that after his return into Sardinia he added to schism certain maxims contrary to those of the catholic church. See Theodoret, Hist. Eccl. l. 3. c. 2. St Jerom, Dial. adv. Luciferian. St Ambrose de obitu Satyri, p. 316, Socrates, l. 3. c. 9. Sozomen, l. 5. c. 13. and amongst the moderns Tillemont, T. 7 p. 514. Ceillier, T. 5. p. 384.

Theodoret says, that the priests of the idols complained to Julian, that if Athanasius was suffered to remain in Alexandria, there would not remain one adorer of the gods in that city. Julian, having received this advice, answered their complaint, telling them, that, though he had allowed the Galileans (his name of derision for Christians) to return to their own country, he had not given them leave to enter on the possession of their churches. And that Athanasius in particular, who had been banished by the orders of several emperors, ought not to have done this; he therefore ordered him immediately to leave the city on the receipt of his letter, under the penalty of a severer punishment. He even dispatched a messenger to kill him. The saint comforted his flock, and having recommended them to the ablest of his friends, with an assurance that this storm would soon blow over, embarked in a boat on the river for Thebais. He who had orders to kill him, hearing that he was fled, sailed after him with great expedition. The saint, having timely notice sent him of it, was advised by those that accompanied him, to turn aside into the deserts that bordered on the Nile. But St Athanasius ordered them to tack about and fall down the river towards Alexandria; "to shew, said he, that our protector is more powerful than our persecutors." Meeting the pursuivant, he asked them whether they had seen Athanasius as they came down the river, and was answered, that he was not far off, and that if they made haste, they would quickly come up with him. Upon this the assassin continued the pursuit, while St Athanasius got safe and unsuspected to Alexandria, where he lay hid for some time. But, upon a fresh order coming from Julian for his death, he withdrew into the deserts of Thebais, going from place to place to avoid falling into the hands of his enemy. St Theodorus of Tabenna being come to visit him, while at Antinoë, with St Pammon, put an end to his apprehensions on this score, by assuring him, on a revelation God had favoured him with, that Julian had just then expired in Persia, where he was killed on the twenty-seventh of June in 363. The holy hermit acquainted him also that the reign of his Christian successor would be very short. This was Jovian, who being chosen emperor, refused to accept that dignity till the army had declared for the Christian religion. He was no sooner placed upon the throne, but he wrote to St Athanasius, cancelling the sentence of his banishment, and praying him to resume the government of his church, adding high commendations of his virtues and unshaken constancy. St Athanasius waited not for the emperor's orders to quit his retreat, but on being apprised, as before related, of the death of his persecutor, appeared on a sudden and resumed his usual functions in the midst of his people, who were joyfully surprised at the sight of him. The emperor, well knowing that he was the chief person that had stood up in defence of the Christian faith, besought him, by a second letter, to send him a full account in writing of its doctrines, and some rules for his conduct and behaviour in what regarded the affairs of the church. St Athanasius called a synod of learned bishops, and returned an answer in their name; recommending, that he should hold inviolable the doctrine explained in the council of Nice, this being the faith of the apostles, which had been preached in all ages, and was generally professed throughout the whole Christian world, "some few excepted," says he, "who embrace the opinions of Arius." The Arians attempted in vain to alter his favourable dispositions towards the saint, by renewing their old calumnies. Not satisfied with his instructions by letters, he desired to see him; and the holy bishop was received by him at Antioch, with all possible tokens of affection and esteem: but, after giving him holy advice, he hastened back to Alexandria. The good emperor Jovian reigned only eight months, dying on the seventeenth of February in 364. Valentinian, his successor, chose to reside in the West, and making his brother Valens partner in the empire, assigned to him the East. Valens was inclined to Arianism, and openly declared in favour of it, in 367, when he received baptism from the hands of Eudoxius, bishop of the Arians at Constantinople.

The same year he published an edict for the banishment of all those bishops who had been deprived of their sees by Constantius. Theodoret says this was the fifth time that St Athanasius had been driven from his church. He had been employed in visiting the churches, monasteries and deserts of Egypt. Upon the news of this new tempest, the people of Alexandria rose in tumults, demanding of the governor of the province, that they might be allowed to enjoy their bishop; and he promised to write to the emperor. St Athanasius, seeing the sedition appeased, stole privately out of the town, and hid himself in the country in the vault in which his father was interred, where he lay four months, according to Sozomen. The very night after he withdrew, the governor and the general of the troops took possession of the church in which he usually performed his functions; but were not able to find him. As soon as his departure was known, the city was filled with lamentation, the people vehemently calling on the governor for the return of their pastor. The fear of a sedition moved Valens at length to grant them that satisfaction, and to write to Alexandria, that he might abide there in peace in the free possession of the churches. In 369, the holy patriarch convened at Alexandria a council of ninety bishops, in whose name he wrote to the bishops of Africa to beware of any surprise from those who were for preferring the decrees of the council of Rimini to those of Nice.

The continued scenes of perfidy, dissimulation and malice, which the history of Arianism exhibits to our view, amaze and fill us with horror. Such superlative impiety and hypocrisy would have seemed incredible, had not the facts been attested by St Athanasius himself, and by all the historians of that age. They were likewise of so public a nature, having been performed before the eyes of the whole world, or proved by ocular demonstration, in the Arians own synods, that St Athanasius could never have inserted them in his apology, addressed to these very persons, and to the whole world, could any circumstances have been disproved or even called in question. By such base arts and crimes, did the Arian blasphemy, spread itself like a spark of fire set to a train of gunpowder, and being supported by the whole power of a crafty and proud emperor, seemed to threaten destruction to the church of Christ, had it not been built on foundations which, according to the promises of Him who laid them, all the power of hell shall never be able to shake. During more than 300 years it had stood the most violent assaults of the most cruel and powerful persecutors, who had bent the whole power of the empire to extirpate, if it had been possible, the Christian name. But the more it was depressed the more it grew and flourished, and the blood of martyrs was a seed which pushed forth and multiplied with such a wonderful increase, as to extend its shoots into every part of the then known world, and to fill every province and every rank of men in the Roman empire. By the confession of the emperors themselves, it appeared triumphant over all the efforts of hell. But the implacable enemy of man's salvation did not desist in his attacks. His restless envy and malice grew more outrageous by his defeats; and shifting his ground, he stirred up his instruments within the bowels of the church itself, and excited against it a storm, in which hell seemed to vomit out all its poison, and unite all the efforts of its malice. But these vain struggles again terminated in the most glorious triumph of the church. In those perilous times, God raised up many holy pastors, whom he animated with his spirit, and strengthened in the defence of his truth. Among these St Athanasius was the most illustrious champion. By his undaunted courage and unparalleled greatness of soul, under the most violent persecutions, he merited a crown equal to that of the most glorious martyrs: by his erudition, eloquence and writings, he holds an illustrious place among the principal doctors of the church; and by the example of his virtue, by which he rivalled the most renowned anchorets of the deserts, and the most holy confessors, he stemmed the torrent of scandal and iniquity, which threatened to bear down all before it.

St Gregory Nazianzen gives the following portrait of his virtues in private life. "He was most humble and lowly in mind, as his virtue was most sublime and inimitable. He was most courteous to all, and every one had easy access to him; he was meek, gentle, compassionate, amiable in his discourse, but much more so in his life; of an angelical disposition, mild in his reproofs, and instructive in his commendations; in both which he observed such even measures, that his reproof spoke the kindness of a father, and his commendation the authority of a master; and neither was his indulgence over-tender, nor his severity harsh. His life supplied the place of sermons, and his sermons prevented correction. In him all ranks might find enough to admire, and enough to imitate; one might commend his unwearied austeritiy in fasting and prayer; another his perseverance in watchings and the divine praises; a third his admirable care of the poor; a fourth his courage in checking the injustice of the rich; or his condescension to the humble." Thus saint Gregory Nazianzen (13), who says he was a load-stone to dissenters, drawing them to his opinion, unless hardened in malice, and always at least raising in them a secret reverence and veneration for his person; but that he was an adamant to his persecutors, no more capable of impressions against justice, than a rock of marble is of yielding to any slight touch. After innumerable combats, and as many great victories, this glorious saint, having governed the church of Alexandria 46 years, was called to a life exempt from labour and suffering, on the 2d of May, on a Thursday, according to the oriental chronicle of the Coptes, in the year 373, as is clear from the same authors, St Proterius and St Jerom; not in 371, as Socrates mistakes (b). St Gregory Nazian-

(13) Or. 21. p. 378.

(b) The Greeks honour St Athanasius on the 2d of May, because his relicks were on that day deposited in the church of St Sophia at Constantinople, when they were translated thither from Alexandria, as their Ephemerides in their Synaxarium expressly mention. They also commemorate him on the 18th of January, which Jos. Assemani (in Kalend. Univ. T. 6. p. 299.) proves against Papebroke to have been the day of his death, as the Menæa expressly assure us. The Greeks join with him on the 18th of January St Cyril, because he was bishop of the same city: though he died in June, on the

zen thus describes his death : " He ended his life in a holy old age, and went to keep company with his fathers, the patriarchs, prophets, apostles and martyrs, who had fought valiantly for the truth, as he had done : and to comprise his epitaph in few words, he departed this life with far greater honour and glory than what he had received in his more than triumphant entries into Alexandria, when he returned from his banishments ; so much was his death lamented by all good men, and the immortal glory of his name remained imprinted in their hearts." He desires the saint " to look down upon him from heaven, to favour and assist him in the government of his flock, and to preserve it in the true faith : and if, for the sins of the world, heretics were to prevail against it, to deliver him from these evils, and to bring him, by his intercession, to enjoy God in his company."

The humility, modesty, and charity, of this great saint ; his invincible meekness towards his enemies, who were the most implacable and basest of men, and the heroic fortitude, patience and zeal, by which he triumphed over the persecutions of almost the whole world confederated against him, and of four emperors, Constantine, Constantius, Julian and Valens, three of whom employed wiles, stratagems and hypocrisy, and sometimes open force, to destroy him : these, I say, and all other eminent virtues, have rendered his name venerable in the church to the latest ages, which he ceases not to instruct and edify by his writings (i).

the 9th of which month he is again commemorated in the Menææ, but on the 27th in the Menology of the emperor Basil. See Jos. Assemani, ad 2 Maij. T. p. 301. 302. 303. against the different opinions both of Bollandus and Papebroke.

(i) Photius observes (Cod. 140.) that the diction and style of St Athanasius is clear, majestic, full of deep sense, strength, and solid reasoning, without any thing redundant or superfluous. He seems to hold the next place in eloquence after St Basil, St Gregory Nazianzen and St Chrysostom. Erasmus even admires his style above that of all the other fathers, saying, it hath nothing rugged or difficult, like that of Tertullian, nothing laboured or embarrassed, like that of St Hilary, nothing studied like that of St Gregory Nazianzen, no windings and turnings like that of St Austin, or of St Chrysostom for

These and other virtues St Athanasius learned and practised in the most heroic degree, by studying them devoutly and assiduously in the sacred life and in the di-

for it is every where beautiful, elegant, easy, florid, and admirably adapted to whatever subject he treats : though in some of his works it wants the finishings which more leisure would have given it. Cosmas, an ancient monk, used to say, "When you find any thing of the works of St Athanasius, if you have no paper, write it on your clothes." (Prat. Spir. c. 40.)

The first of his works is his Discourse against the Pagans. In it he displays a most extensive human learning, shews the origin, progress and folly of idolatry ; and raises men to the knowledge of the true God, first from the sentiment of their own soul, and secondly, from visible things. The Discourse on the Incarnation is a continuation of the same work, and proves, first, that the world must have had its beginning by creation, and secondly, that only the Son of God by his Incarnation could have delivered man from the death which he had incurred by sin. The saint composed these two pieces before the origin of Arianism, about the year 318, when he was not above 22 years of age. The Exposition of Faith is an explanation of the mysteries of the Trinity and Incarnation against the Arians. The treatise on those words: All things have been given me by my Father ; the Letter to the orthodox bishops against the illegal intrusion of Gregory into his see in 341 ; Apology against the Arians, consisting chiefly of authentic memoirs for his own justification against their slanders, composed after his second exile, in 351 ; his treatise On the decrees of Nice against the Eusebians ; his Apology for the doctrine of St Dionysius of Alexandria, whom the Arians quoted in favour of their error, and his circular letter to the bishops of Egypt and Lybia, when George was coming to Alexandria, to intrude himself into his see, were compiled against the Arians. His great work against those heretics are his Four Orations against the Arians. He composed them whilst concealed among the anchorets. Photius admires the beauty, strength and just reasoning of this excellent performance, which entirely beats down that heresy ; and says, that from this fountain St Gregory Nazianzen and St Basil the Great drew that torrent of eloquence with which they gloriously defended the Catholic faith. Dialectic is employed here with admirable art ; but the oracles of holy scripture are as it were the sinews of the work. Dracontius, a holy abbot, was chosen bishop of Hermopolis : but fled and hid himself, refusing to submit to that yoke. The letter of St Athanasius to him is a tender persuasive to accept that charge. His letter to Serapion bishop of Thmuis, on the death of Arius, shews his modesty in the moderation with which he speaks of that tragical misfortune. We have four other letters of our saint to the same Serapion, to prove the divinity of the Holy Ghost, written in 360, or thereabouts. The letter to the Solitaries in 358, is a confutation of the Arians, with some account of the persecution under George. His Apology to the emperor Constantius, written in the deserts, among the wild beasts, vine heart of Jesus. And in the simplicity of faith he adored the incomprehensible greatness of the Divinity, his infinite wisdom, justice and sanctity, with the boundless treasures of his love and mercy, in the mystery of his adorable Incarnation. If we have an holy ambition to improve ourselves in this saving knowledge, in this most sublime and truly divine science, which will not only enlighten our understanding, but also reform all the affections of our hearts, and be in us a source of unspeakable peace, joy, love, light and happiness, we must study in the same school. We must become zealous lovers and adorers of our most amiable Redeemer; we must meditate daily on his admirable life, penetrating into the unfathomed abyss of his love, and his perfect sentiments of humility, meekness, and every virtue, in all his actions, and join our homages with in 356, seems the most eloquent and finished piece of all his works. His Apology for his Flight, in 357, is in merit little inferior to it. He shews that it is lawful, and sometimes even a precept, to fly under persecutions. His treatise On Synods, in 359, gives some account of what had passed in those of Seleucia and Rimini. His tome or letter to the church of Antioch, was written by him from his council at Alexandria in 362, to exhort all to union, and to receive the Arians who were converted, only requiring from them a profession of the Nicene faith, and of the divinity of the holy Ghost. The life of St Antony was written in 365. His letter to the emperor Jovian, two letters to St Orsius, abbot of Tabenna, and several other epistles are extant. His book On the Incarnation, and against the Arians, proves also the divinity of the Holy Ghost; and was writ after the year 360. His two books against Apollinaris appeared about the year 372. His imperfect commentary on the psalms shews his extraordinary abilities for that kind of writing. The fragments on St Matthew are judged genuine by Montfaucon (in Collect, Patr.) but appear doubtful to Tournely and some others. The book. On the Incarnation of the Word of God: that, For the Consubstantiality of the Three Persons: that, On Virginity, an excellent work: the Synopsis of the scriptures, also very well penned, and judged genuine by Tillemont, &c. are usually ranked among his doubtful works. The history of a crucifix bleeding; when pierced by the Jews of Berytus, is a mean performance; Baronius attributes it to one Athanasius of Syria. The Creed which bears the name of St Athanasius can only deserve that title, because it explains the mystery of the Trinity which he expounded and maintained with such zeal. It was compiled in Latin in the fifth century. Dr Waterfield hath made a learned collection of what several judicious critics have written on this subject, in his dissertation concerning this Creed.

those which he paid in his divine heart, and still continues to offer to his Father : we must sacrifice to him our affections in transports of joy and fervour, adoring, praising, loving and thanking him ; and must continually beg his mercy and grace, that we may be replenished with his spirit of humility and every virtue, and, above all, that his love may take absolute possession of our hearts, and of all our faculties and powers. “ The Son of God,” says St Athanasius, “ took upon him our poverty and miseries, that he might impart to us a share of his riches. His sufferings will render us one day impassible, and his death immortal. His tears will be our joy, his burial our resurrection, and his baptism is our sanctification, according to what he says in his gospel : For them I sanctify myself that they also may be made holy in fruits.”

MAY III.

THE INVENTION, or DISCOVERY of the HOLY CROSS.

From St Cyril of Jerusalem, cat. 10. St Paulinus, ep. 31. p. 193.
 St Sulpicius Severus, St Ambrose, St Chrysostom, Rufinus, Theodoret, Socrates and Sozomen. See Tillemont, T. 7. p. 6. on St Helena.

A. D. 326.

God having restored peace to his church, by exalting Constantine the Great to the imperial throne, that pious prince, who had triumphed over his enemies by the miraculous power of the Cross, was very desirous of expressing his veneration for the holy places which had been honoured and sanctified by the presence and sufferings of our blessed Redeemer on earth. He accordingly came to a resolution to build a magnificent church in the city of Jerusalem, as the place which had been most honoured by the presence, the instructions and miracles of the Son of God. St Helena, the emperor's mother, out of a desire of visiting the holy places there, undertook a journey into Palestine in 326, though at that time near 80 years of age : and on her arrival at Jerusalem was inspired with a great desire to find the identical cross on which Christ had suffered for our sins. But there was no mark or tradition, even amongst the Christians, where it lay. The heathens, out of an aversion to Christianity, had done what they could to conceal the place where our Saviour was buried. They had heaped upon it a great quantity of stones and rubbish, besides building a temple to Venus; that those, who came thither to adore him, might seem to pay their worship to a marble idol representing this false deity. They had moreover erected a statue of Jupiter in the place where our Saviour rose from the dead, as we are informed by St Jerom; which figure continued there from the emperor Adrian's time to Constantine's: which precautions of the persecutors shew the veneration which Christians paid from the beginning to the instruments of our redemption. Helena, being willing to spare no pains to compass her pious design, consulted all people at Jerusalem and near it, whom she thought likely to assist her in finding out the cross; and was credibly informed, that if she could find out the sepulchre, she would likewise find the instruments of the punishment; it being always the custom among the Jews to make a great hole near the place where the body of the criminal was buried, and to throw into it whatever belonged to his execution; looking upon all these things as detestable objects, and which for that reason ought to be removed out of sight. The pious empress therefore ordered the profane buildings to be pulled down, the statues to be broken in pieces, and the rubbish to be removed; and, upon digging to a great depth, they discovered the holy sepulchre, and near it three crosses, also the nails which had pierced our Saviour's body, and the title which had been fixed to his cross. By this discovery they understood that one of the three crosses was that which they were in quest of, and that the other two belonged to the two malefactors between whom our Saviour had been crucified. But whereas the title was found separate from the cross, a difficulty remained to distinguish which of the three was that on which our Divine Redeemer consummated his sacrifice for the salvation of the world. In this perplexity the holy bishop Macarius, knowing that one of the principal ladies of the city lay extremely ill, suggested to the empress to cause the three crosses to be carried to the sick person, not doubting but God would discover which was the cross they sought for. This being done, St Macarius prayed that God would have regard to their faith, and after his prayer applied the crosses singly to the patient, who was immediately and perfectly recovered by the touch of one of the three crosses, the other two having been tried without effect. (1) St Helena, full of joy, for having found the treasure which she had so earnestly sought, and so highly esteemed, built a church on the spot, and lodged it there with great veneration, having provided an extraordinary rich case for it. She afterwards carried part of it to the emperor Constantine then at Constantinople, who received it with great veneration: (a) another part she sent, or rather carried to Rome, to be placed in the church which she built there, called, Of the holy cross of Jerusalem, where it remains to this day. The discovery of the Cross must have happened about the month of May, or early in the spring. For St Helena went the same year to Constantinople, and from thence to Rome, where she died in the arms of her son on the 18th of August 326, as Pagi demonstrates from Eusebius and Gotheфридus. The title was sent by St Helena to the same church in Rome, and deposited on the top of an arch, where it was found in a case of lead, in 1492, as may be read at length in Bozius. (2) The inscription in Hebrew, Greek and Latin, is in red letters, and the wood was whitened. Thus it was in 1492; but these colours are since faded. Also the words Jesus and Judæorum are eaten away. The board is nine, but must have been twelve inches long (3) (b).

(1) Sozomen, Theodoret, Rufinus. (2) Tr. de Cruce, l. i. c. 2.

(a) It was out of a religious respect to the sacred instrument of the death of Christ, that Constantine in the 20th year of his reign forbade the cross to be used in the punishment of malefactors in any part of his dominions; which has been observed ever since throughout all Christendom.

(3) See Lipsius de Cruce, l. 3. c. 14.

(b) The title kept at our Lady's in Toulouse is an imitation of this; but the inscription is in five, whereas in this it is in three lines. It was the custom of the Romans to cause the crime, for which any one was condemned, to be written and carried before the criminal to the place of his punishment. Thus Suetonius, speaking of a criminal, says: (in Caligula, c. 38.) "The title which declared the cause of the punishment being carried before him." Dio speaking of another says: (b. 54.) "With the title in writing which declared the cause of his death." And St Attalus, the martyr at Lyons, "was led about the amphitheatre with a tablet borne before him, on which it was written: This is Attalus the Christian," as is related by Eusebius, (hist. b. 5. c. 1.) Pursuant to this Roman custom, Pilate ordered the title, expressive of the cause of our Saviour's crucifixion, to be carried before him to the place of execution, as well as to be affixed to the cross. But though he meant it to signify his having brought this punishment upon himself, for having aspired to the sovereign power; yet, by a particular direction of divine providence, (as is described by Prudentius in elegant verse, Apoth, adv. gentes, v. 381.) it in fact proclaimed him to Jews, Greeks and Romans, what he really was, their true King, that they might read, and reverence him as such. While the malefactor hung bleeding on the cross, it was usual by means of a sponge to apply vinegar to his wounds, that by its astringent quality it might serve to staunch the blood in some degree, and prevent the criminal being put out of his pain by death, sooner than was intended. The holy sponge which served for this purpose at our Lord's crucifixion, is shewn at Rome in the church of St John Lateran, tinged with blood, and held in great veneration. The holy lance which opened his sacred side is kept at Rome, but wants the point. Andrew of Crete says (de exalt. Crucis) that it was buried together with the cross. At least St Gregory of Tours (l. de gl. mart. c. 17.) and venerable Bede (de loc. sanct. c. 2.) testify, that in their time it was kept at Jerusalem. For fear of the Saracens it was buried privately at Antioch: in which city it was found in 1098, under ground, and wrought many miracles, as Robert the monk (hist. Hieros. l. 7.) and many eye-witnesses, testify. It was carried first to Jerusalem, and soon after to Constantinople. The emperor Baldwin II. sent the point of it to Venice by way of pledge for a loan of money. St Lewis, king of France, redeemed this relick, by paying off the sum it lay in pledge for, and caused it to be conveyed to Paris, where it is still kept in the Holy Chapel. The rest of the lance remained at Constantinople after the Turks had taken that city, till in 1492, the sultan Bajazet sent it by an ambassador, in a rich beautiful case, to pope Innocent VIII, adding that the point was in the possession of the king of France.

The crown of thorns was given by the emperor Baldwin II. to St Lewis as to his cousin, and great benefactor, because the city of Constantinople

The main part of the cross St Helena inclosed in a silver shrine, and committed it to the care of St Marcarius, that it might be delivered down to posterity, stantinople was no longer a place of security, being sorely pressed by the Saracens and Greeks; also in gratitude for his extraordinary contributions to the defence of the eastern empire and the holy places. St Lewis afterwards in requital voluntarily paid off a loan which that empire had borrowed from the Venetians. William of Nangis, Vincent of Beauvais, and other French historians of that time, relate how this sacred treasure was with great devotion carried in a sealed case by holy religious men, by the way of Venice into France. St Lewis, with the queen-mother, his brothers and many prelates and princes, met it five leagues beyond Sens. The pious king and Robert of Artois, his second brother, being barefoot and in their shirts, carried it into that city to the cathedral of St Stephen, accompanied by a numerous procession, bathed in tears, which the sentiments of gratitude and religion drew from their eyes. It was thence conveyed to Paris, where it was received with extraordinary solemnity. St Lewis built the Holy Chapel, as it is called, for its reception, and annexed thereto a rich foundation of a chapter of canons. He afterwards received from Constantinople the large portion of the cross which St Helena had sent thither to her son, and other precious relicks with which she enriched the same place. Some thorns have been distributed from this treasure to other churches; and some have been made in imitation of them. They are usually very long.

The nails with which Christ was fastened on the cross have been imitated by a like devotion. Calvin pretends to reckon fourteen or fifteen held for genuine, but names several never heard of but by himself, as that of St Helena in Rome; for this is the same church with that of the Holy Cross; one at Sienna; one at Venice; one in the church of the Carmelites in Paris; one in the Holy Chapel; one at Draguignan: and nobody knows where the village of Tenaille is, where he places another. Some multiplication of these nails has sprung from the filings of that precious relick put into another nail made like it, or at least from like nails which have touched it. The true nail kept at Rome in the church of the Holy Cross, has been manifestly filed, and is now without a point, as may be seen in all pictures of it. St Charles Borromæo, a prelate most rigorous in the approbation of relicks, had many nails made like another which is kept at Milan, and distributed them, after they had touched the holy nail. He gave one as a relick to king Philip II. These are all like that of Rome. St Gregory the Great, and other ancient popes, sent raspings of the chains of St Peter as relicks, and sometimes put something of them into other chains made like them. F. Honore de sainte Marie, a judicious critic, relates a late authentic miracle performed by a heart made of taffety in resemblance of the heart of St Theresa. As to the true nails. St Helena as an object of veneration. It was accordingly kept with singular care and respect in the magnificent church which she and her son built in Jerusalem. See the lives of St Cyril of Jerusalem, St Porphyrius of Gaza, &c. St Paulinus, in his epistle to Severus, (4) relates, that though chips were almost daily cut off from it, and given to devout persons, yet the sacred wood suffered thereby no diminution. It is affirmed by St Cyril of Jerusalem (5) 25 years after the discovery, that pieces of the cross were spread all over the earth: he compares this wonder to the miraculous feeding of 5000 men, as recorded in the gospel. Read Gretzer On the Cross. The stately church which Constantine the Great built at Jerusalem, the rich orna-

(4) Ep. 12.

(5) Cat. 4. 10. 13.

Helena threw one into the Adriatic sea, to lay a violent storm in which she was in danger of perishing; and, according to St Gregory of Tours, it immediately ceased. St Ambrose (de ob. Theod. n. 47.) and others testify, that her son Constantine the Great fixed one in a rich diadem of pearls which he wore on the most solemn occasions; and that, for a protection in his wars and dangers, he set another in a costly bridle which he used; St Gregory of Tours says, that two were employed in it. It seems most probable, that there were four nails, and that the feet were fastened with two nails apart, and not across with one. The Romans fixed little broad pieces of wood on the crosses of malefactors for the feet to rest upon, as Pliny mentions. See Lipsius, On the Cross.

The pillar at which our Lord was scourged, was anciently kept at Jerusalem with other holy relics on Mount Sion, as is mentioned by St Gregory Nazianzen, Or. 1. in Julian. St Paulinus, ep. 34. St Gregory of Tours, l. 1. de glor. mart. c. 7. Ven. Bede, de locis sanctis, c. 3. St Prudentius, and St Jerom. It is shewn at Rome through iron rails in a little chapel in the church of St Praxedes. Over the chapel it is written, that cardinal John Columna, apostolic legate in the East under pope Honorius III. brought it thither, in the year 1223. The pillar is of grey, or black and white marble, one foot and a half long, and one foot diameter at the bottom, and eight inches at the top, where is an iron-ring to which criminals were tied. Some think it is only the upper part of that which St Jerom mentions: but there appear no marks of a fracture. The Jews scourged criminals first on the back; then often on the belly, and also on both sides: which seems to have likewise been the Roman custom.

The blood of Christ, which is kept in some places, of which the most famous is that at Mantua, seems to be what has sometimes issued from the miraculous bleeding of some crucifix, when pierced in derision by Jews or pagans, instances of which are recorded in authentic histories. See St Thomas. 3. p. 54. a. 2. ad. 3. & quodl. 5. a. 5.

ments of which are mentioned by Eusebius, (6) was called the Basilic of the Holy Cross, because it possessed this precious treasure; the keeper of which was always a venerable priest. It was shewn publicly to the people at Easter. The same was also called the church of the sepulchre, or of the resurrection; though this was properly only the title of the holy chapel in it which stood over the sepulchre, or cavern in which our Saviour was buried, which was in the garden adjoining to Mount Calvary; so that this great church covered the sepulchre, and was extended so far on mount Calvary as also to include the rock Golgotha, and the very place where the cross of Christ stood at his crucifixion. (c) This extensive building was inclosed within the walls of Jerusalem when that city was rebuilt. Constantine also built a church upon Mount Olivet, over the spot from which our Saviour ascended into heaven. This place was venerated by Christians from the very time of his death, as much as the fear of their enemies would permit. And this may account for the industry of the pagans in filling up the sepulchre or cavern with stones, heaping rubbish over it to a considerable height, and setting up the most infamous of their idols over it, that the Christians might seem to worship a Venus, when they came hither to

(6) Vit. Constant. l. 3.

(c) This sacred building raised by Constantine consisted properly of two churches, the one called Anastasis, or of the Resurrection or Sepulchre, the other Martyrium, or of the Cross, which covered the spot where Christ was crucified. For Adamnan (l. i. de Locis Sanctis, c. 4. apud Mabill. Act. Bened. Sæc. 3. part 2. p. 506.) testifies that they were separated by a little court or passage. Plateolam. And St Jerom (ep. 38, alias 61. ad Pammachium adv. Joan. Hieros. p. 312.) says, that as St Epiphanius walked from the Anastasis to the Cross, the croud flocked about him, every one striving to kiss his feet, or touch the hem of his garment, and presenting to him their little children to bless. See Simmondus in an admirable exposition which he gives of an old medal with the Greek inscription Anastasis. (Op. T. 4. p. 436. & 704.) and Du Cange (Diss. de Nummis infer. ævi. §. 66.) Those who with Henry Valesius (ep. de Anastasi & Martyrio, ad calcem Eusebii, p. 304. ed. i.) will have these two churches to have been but one and the same, must allow that they were only joined by a gallery or court.

pay their homage to Jesus Christ. We find the Festival of the Invention, or the discovery of the Cross, solemnized in the Latin church ever since the fifth or sixth century. (d) The finding of the cross by St Helena happened in the year of our Lord 326, in the twenty-first year of Constantine's reign, the thirteenth of the pontificate of Sylvester, and the first after the council of Nice. (e) The feast of the Exaltation of the Cross was kept in May, from the time that it was triumphantly placed by St Helena in the church at Jerusalem upon its discovery in 326, which continued to the year 335, when the great church of the Resurrection was built at Jerusalem by the orders of Constantine the Great, and dedicated on the 13th of September that year, as St Sophronius, (Or. de Exalt. S. Crucis in Bibl. Patr. Colon. T. 7.) Nicephorus and the Typic of St Sabas, mention. The Cross was exalted or set up in that church the day following, which was Sunday. Hence both the Greeks and Latins kept this feast on the 14th of September; and St Chrysostom's death is related to have happened on this festival. After the recovery of the Cross by Heraclius, this festival began

(d) See the Bollandists, May 3.

(e) This history of the discovery of the cross is related by St Cyril of Jerusalem, and several other authors above-mentioned, who lived in the same age. It is therefore matter of surprise how James Bagnage could so far forget them as to say, that Gregory of Tours is the first of those who have spoken of it. (Hist. de Juifs l. 6. c. 14. sect. 10. p. 1244.) It is objected by some that Eusebius makes no mention of it in his history or life of Constantine, though he describes at large the building of the church of the sepulchre. But he is often guilty, like Josephus, of capital omissions in his history, to the great disappointment of his readers. But whether this omission in that place proceeded from carelessness or design, as from jealousy of any other motive, his silence ought not to be of any weight against the positive testimonies of so many unexceptionable witnesses. Montfaucon also takes notice, that Eusebius himself has clearly mentioned this miraculous event, in his comments on Psalm lxxxvii. p. 549. where he speaks of miracles wrought in his time near the sepulchre of Christ, and of the church that was built there by St Helena. Nor can this passage be any more suspected of having been foisted in by interpolation, than that an omission of this fact happened in his historical works by the fault of transcribers. Nay, a paragraph might be more easily passed over by the fault of copiers.

to be kept in the Eastern church with greater solemnity and a fast. At Jerusalem the Cross was shewn to the people to be adored on Easter Monday, and also in the middle of Lent, as we learn from St Sophronius, St Paulinus, &c. In the Latin church, this was celebrated on the third of May, whether this was the day of the Discovery of the Cross by St Helena, or of Constantine's vision or victory, or of the dedication of the church of the Holy Cross in Rome, is uncertain.

The cross was chosen by our dear Redeemer to be the glorious instrument of his victory and triumph over the devil and sin; and by his death thereon he has purchased for us redemption, grace, and glory. The cross is his holy standard under which all his followers fight his battles; and, according to the holy fathers, will be borne before him in a triumphant manner, when he shall come in glory to judge the world. The church professes a very high regard and veneration for this mysterious and salutary sign, giving it an honourable place in her churches, making frequent use of it in her holy offices, in the administration of the sacraments, and on many other occasions; in which particulars she imitates the earliest and purest ages of Christianity (7). It is the remark of St Jerom, "that if the ark was held in such high veneration among the Jews, how much more ought the Christians to respect the wood of the cross, whereon our Saviour offered himself a bleeding victim for our sins?" By devoutly respecting the sign of the cross, we profess our faith in Christ, who was crucified for us, we excite our hope in his merits, kindle his love in our breasts, renew the remembrance of his sacred death, and inflame our meditations on his adorable passion, in which we learn all virtue, and all spiritual knowledge. What obedience are we here taught? seeing Christ himself learned obedience from those things which he suffered (8). What love of God and our neighbour? seeing Jesus has sprinkled his cross with his blood, to seal his new alliance of charity, and to inculcate his own law and a new commandment. What patience do we here learn? What meekness and humility? the two things which Jesus commands us particularly to learn of him. And it is on the cross and in his sacred passion that he has principally set us the most moving example, and pressed upon us the most endearing precepts of these virtues. Whence, assiduous meditation on the sufferings of Christ is the great school of Christian perfection. All the saints found in it their comfort and their joy; in it they continually feasted their souls with the most sweet fruits of love and devotion: in it they learned to die perfectly to themselves, and entered into the sentiments of Christ crucified: (9) here they stirred up their souls to perfect compunction; and placing themselves in spirit under the cross of their Divine Redeemer, they offered their tears and earnest supplications to the Father, through the Son, who made himself our sacrifice on this tree: I have seated myself under the shade of him whom I desired, and his fruit was sweet to my palate. (1) Where did St Bernard learn his eminent spirit of devotion, but in the meditation on Christ's sufferings? Where did the glorious St Austin glean his spiritual science, but, as he himself tell us, in the wounds of his Redeemer? It was in them that the admirable St Francis conceived his seraphic ardours. St Thomas Aquinas studied his sacred science and virtue in the book of the cross, and always had recourse to God at the foot of the crucifix. "St Bonaventure seems," says St Francis of Sales, "when he writes the spiritual breathings of his heart, all inflamed with love: to have no other paper than the cross, no other pen than the lance, no other ink than what is dipped in the precious blood of Christ. With what feeling sentiments did he cry out: It is good always to abide in spirit before the cross. Let us make to ourselves three tabernacles in the wounds of our crucified Redeemer, one in his feet, another in his hands, a third in his sacred side. Here will I rest; here will I watch; here will I read; here will I converse (11)." St Paul, who was very learned, esteemed all his other science as nothing, and looked on the knowledge of Jesus Christ crucified as his only learning. I judged not myself to know any thing among you but Jesus Christ, and him crucified. (12) By being instructed in this mystery, and having the sentiments of Christ crucified deeply impressed upon his heart, he knew all that he wished to know: it was his only solicitude and desire, daily to improve himself in this one science. (f) The same apostle, in the transport of his ardent love of the cross, cried out, God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ. (13) To glory in a thing is to love it, to esteem it, to place in it our greatness and happiness. "Every one glories in those things in which he places his greatness," as St Thomas says. The sacred passion of Christ is the source of all our happiness and good, and the perfect model and school of all virtue. If it be the tender object of our devotion, if we love, and desire always to meditate on our Redeemer crucified for us, the sacred instrument of his triumph, the ensign and trophy of his precious victory, and the principal emblem of his sufferings, which it represents to us, and strongly paints before our eyes, must be always dear and most amiable to us.

(7) See Tert. de coron. militis. (8) Hebr. v. 8.

(9) Phil. ii. 5. (10) Cant. ii. 3. (11) St Bonav. l. de Vita Christi.

ON THE SAME DAY.

St ALEXANDER, Pope, M. He succeeded St Evaristus, in 109, and held the holy see ten years, but not complete. He died in 119, and is ranked among the martyrs in the canon of the mass. Notwithstanding the silence of St Irenæus, we also find him styled a martyr in the sacramentary of St Gregory the Great in the ancient calendar of Fronto, and unanimously in other martyrologies which join with him two companions, Eventius and Theodulus, who suffered with him, or at least about the same time of his happy death. The bodies of SS. Alexander, Eventius and Theodulus, were interred on the Nomentan road, but were translated into the church of St Sabina, which now belong to a great convent of Dominican friars. St Juvenal the first bishop of Narni in Umbria, who died in peace about the year 367, is commemorated in the Roman Breviary on the same day. He is styled a martyr by St Gregory the Great. (Hom. 57. in Evang. & Dial. l. 4. c. 12.

(12) 1 Cor. ii. 2. (13) Gal. vi. 14.

(f) Etsi hoc solum sciebat nihil est quod nesciebat. Magnum est scire Jesum crucifixum. S. Aug. Serm. 161. n. 3.

M A Y IV.

ST MONICA, WIDOW.

From St Austin's works, collected by Tillemont, T. 8. p. 455. and Berti, l. de Rebus Gestis S. Aug. Venetiis. an. 1756. in App. de S. Monica.

A. D. 387.

THE church is doubly indebted, under God, to the saint of this day, namely, for the birth, and still more so for the conversion of the great St Austin; who was more beholden to St Monica for his spiritual life by grace, than for his corporal life by his birth and education. She was born in 332, in a pious family, and early instructed in the fear of God. She often professed her singular obligations to a virtuous discreet maid servant, whom her parents entrusted with the education of their children, and who instilled into them maxims of piety, restrained the least sallies of their passions, and by her prudence, words and example, inspired them with an early sense and love of every duty. She was so strict in regard to her charge, that, besides making them observe great temperance in their meals, she would not allow them to drink even water at any other times, how great thirst soever they might pretend. She used to say: "You are now for drinking water, but when you come to be mistresses of the cellar, water will be despised, but the habit of drinking will stick by you." Notwithstanding the prudent care of this tutoress, the young Monica contracted insensibly an inclination to wine: and when she was sent by her parents, who were strangers to it, to draw wine for the use of the family, in taking the liquor out with a cup, she would put her lips to it and sip a little. This she did at first, not out of any intemperate desire of liquor, but from mere youth and levity. However, by adding to this little every day a little more, she overcame the original reluctance she had to wine, and drank whole cups of it with pleasure, as it came in her way. This was a most dangerous intemperance, though it never proceeded to any considerable excess (a). God watched over his servant to correct her of it, and made use of a servant maid as his instrument; who having observed it in her young mistress, by following her into the cellar, words arising one day between them, she reproached her with it, calling her a wine-bibber. This affected Monica in such a manner, that, entering seriously into herself, she acknowledged, condemned and from that moment entirely corrected her fault. She after this received baptism, from which time she lived always in such a manner, that she was an odour of edification to all who knew her.

As soon as marriageable, she was disposed of to one Patritius, a citizen of Tagaste, a man of honour and probity, but an idolater. She obeyed and served him as her master, and laboured to gain him to God; though the chief argument she used, whereby to reclaim him from his vices, was the sanctity of her conduct, enforced by an obliging affectionate behaviour, by which she commanded his love, respect and esteem. She had by him two sons, Austin and Navigius, and one daughter. She tolerated the injuries done by him to her marriage-bed in such manner as never to make him the least bitter reproach on that subject. As, on the one side, he was very good-natured and loving, so on the other, he was hasty and choleric. Monica never thwarted him by the least action or word whilst she saw him in anger; but when the fit was over and he was calm, she mildly gave him her reasons and an account of her actions. When she saw other wives bearing the marks of their husbands anger on their disfigured faces, and heard them blaming their roughness of temper or debaucheries, she would answer them: "Lay the blame rather on yourselves and your tongues." Her example alone was a sufficient proof; for notwithstanding the passionate temper of her husband, it was never known that he ever struck her, or that they had ever, for so much as one day, entertained any domestic dissension; because she bore all his sallies with patience and in silence, made no other return but that of a greater obsequiousness, and waited an opportunity to make him sensible of his mistake when that was necessary. And as many as followed her advice in this respect towards their husbands, rejoiced in the experience of the comfort and advantages which accrued to them from their patience and complaisance; while those that did not follow it, continued still in their vexations and sufferings. One of the happy fruits Monica reaped from her patience, was her husband's conversion to Christ; who thereupon became chaste, and faithful in all the duties of a good Christian; he died the year after he had been baptized. By mildness she also gained, both to her own interest and to Christ, her froward mother-in-law. Our saint had an excellent talent at making peace among neighbours, when any falling out had happened among them: on which occasions, such was the energy and the spirit of tender charity with which she delivered herself, that she seemed instructed by her interior Master in what she said. It was her great delight to serve the poor, supplying their wants with cheerfulness and liberality. She assisted daily at the holy oblation of the altar, and never failed to go to church twice a day, morning and night, to assist at public prayer and the dispensation of the divine word, having eternity always in her thought. She studied to imitate the actions of the saints who were in possession of immortal bliss : and, full of confidence in their intercession, she often visited the tombs of the martyrs. (1) She well knew that, in matters relating to religion and a Christian life, nothing should be looked upon as trifling and insignificant ; and that the least actions become great, when done for God, and with great fervour. Her exercises of piety did not hinder her attention in watching over the education of her children, in which God Almighty gave her great occasion of merit and suffering, particularly in Austin, that he might more amply crown her care in the end. He was born in November 354. As he grew up, she endeavoured continually to instil into him sentiments of piety : but fell into an unperceived passion and immoderate desire that he should excel in learning ; though she flattered herself that she regarded this only as a means whereof he might one day make a good use to the honour of God. Her husband earnestly desired the same thing, because he looked upon it as the greatest step whereby his son could raise himself in the world. In his infancy she had ranked him among the catechumens ; and once in an illness all things were prepared for his baptism, but it was deferred.

(a) It is a notorious mistake, and misrepresentation, to call this fault the crime of drunkenness, though such a habit insensibly paves the way to the utmost excesses: and this danger of a saint ought to be a powerful warning to deter all persons, especially servants and young people, from a like custom of sipping, how insignificant and trifling soever the first steps towards it may appear. If Monica was awakened before she was brought to the brink of the precipice, this was the effect of a singular grace; and where she repented thousands perish, and, regardless of every evil present and future, become the murderers of their bodies, their reason, the fortunes of their family and their immortal souls. This destroying evil arises from small beginnings neglected. See Dom Martenne in his learned and judicious note on this passage in the late French translation of the Confessions of St Austin.

Patricius died about the year 371. Austin, who was then seventeen years of age, still continued his studies at Carthage, where, in 373, he was seduced by the Manichees, and drawn into that heresy. (2) Monica, being informed of his misfortune, grieved more bitterly for his spiritual death than worldly mothers do, when they see their children carried to their graves ; nor would she suffer him to live under the same roof with her, or to eat at the same table. " You have heard her vows," says St Austin, addressing himself to God, " and you have not despised her tears ; for she shed torrents in your presence in all places where she offered to you her prayer." His divine Majesty was pleased to give her an assurance that she was heard by a dream, in which she seemed to herself standing on a pile of wood very sorrowful; and that a young man, shining with light, asked her the cause of her grief, and bid her dry up her tears, saying: "Your son is with you." Then casting her eyes towards the place he pointed at, she saw Austin standing on the pile with her. She told her son this dream, and upon his inferring from it, that she should come over to his sentiments in matters of religion; "No," said she, "it was not told me that I was with you, but that you was with me." This her quick answer made a great impression on her son, who, after his conversion, considered it as a divine admonition. She was so much comforted by it, that she again permitted him to eat and live with her. This happened about the end of the year 377; almost nine years before his conversion in August 386. During all this time the holy widow continued her prayers for his conversion, and her sighs and tears, which nothing but his baptism at Milan could dry up. She engaged virtuous and learned prelates to speak to him. One, who had himself been brought up a Manichee, and had been converted by reading their own books, excused himself, saying: "The heart of the youth was yet too indocile, but that God's time would come." She urged him with the greater importunity; at last the good old bishop answered her: "Go: continue to do as you do; it is impossible that a child of such tears should perish:" which words she received as an oracle from heaven. Austin was twenty-nine years old when he determined to go to Rome, with a view to teach rhetoric. She endeavoured to divert him from such a design, fearing it might delay his conversion, and followed him to the sea-side, resolving, either to bring him back, or to bear him company into Italy. He feigned he had no intention to go; that he might rid himself of her importunity. But while she passed the night in a chapel of St. Cyprian in the neighbourhood, he secretly set out. "I deceived her with a lie," says St. Austin, "while she was weeping and praying for me: and what did she ask of you, my God, but that you would not suffer me to sail away? But you graciously heard her main desire, namely, that I might be engaged in your service, and refused to grant what she asked then, in order to give what she always asked." Next morning coming to the seaside and finding him gone, she was seized with a grief not to be expressed. God by this extreme affliction would punish her too human tenderness; and his wisdom suffered her son to be carried by his passions to the place where he had decreed to heal them.

(1) S. Aug. Conf. l. 6. c. 2.

(2) Conf. l. 3. c. 4.

Upon his arrival at Rome, he fell dangerously sick; and he attributes his recovery to the prayers of his mother, though she did not then know his situation: but of a favourable regard to whose petitions God would not cut him off in his impenitence. From Rome he went to teach rhetoric at Milan in 384; and being convinced by St Ambrose of the errors of his sect, renounced that heresy, yet without being fixed in the truth; continuing his search after it in a fluctuating state of mind. Monica followed him, and in a great storm at sea comforted the sailors, assuring them, from a vision, that they would certainly reach the port. Finding him at Milan, she learned from his own mouth that he was no longer a Manichee: but she redoubled her tears and prayers to God to obtain his thorough conversion. She respected St Ambrose as the spiritual physician of his soul; and was herself wonderfully delighted with hearing his solid and beautiful discourses. St Ambrose forbid at Milan the custom of carrying bread and wine to the tombs of the martyrs; and Monica, going thither with her offerings, was stopped by the porter: and being informed that the custom had been forbid, she was more ready to condemn the practice in the simplicity of obedience, than to enquire into the reasons of the prohibition. She therefore was content to carry to those holy places a heart full of pure and religious dispositions, reserving her alms for other occasions. To satisfy her scruple, St Austin consulted St Ambrose on the fast of the Saturday. She had been used to keep fast on that day according to the custom of the church of Tagaste, which was also that of Rome, but at Milan this fast was not observed. She was therefore in doubt what she ought to do. The answer of St Ambrose, taken into the canon law, was: "When I am here, I do not fast on the Saturday; but I fast when I am in Rome; do you the same, and follow always the custom and discipline of the churches where you are:" which precept she obeyed. She had the joy to see St Austin perfectly converted in August 386. She had contrived a good match for him, which might be a bar against any relapse into his former disorders, but understood from him, with great satisfaction, that he was resolved to embrace a state of perpetual continency. When the vacation of the schools, during the vintage, came on, St Austin retired with his friends to a country house. His mother accompanied them, and had a great share in their learned entertainments, in which she, by her natural genius and constant conversation with God, shewed an extraordinary penetration and judgment. St Austin has preserved many of her ingenious and pious reflections; the first he sometimes compares with the finest strokes of Tully and Hortensius, in his books On order, and in that On a happy life.

St Austin was baptized at Easter, in 387, with some of his friends, with whom he continued to live some time. St Monica took as much care of them all as if they had been her children, and paid them all a deference as if each of them had been her father. They all set out together for Africa; but lost St Monica on the road, who fell sick and died at Ostia, where they were to embark. Before her illness, conversing there with her son Austin concerning eternal happiness, and the contempt of this world, she said to him: "Son, there is nothing now in this life that affords me any delight. What have I to do here any longer, or why am I here, I know not; all my hopes in this world being now at an end. The only thing for which I desired to live was that I might see you a catholic and child of heaven. God has done much more, in that I see you now despising all earthly felicity."

city, and entirely devoted to his service. What further business then have I here?" Another day, entertaining herself with her friends in the same place, she spoke so well on the happiness of death as much surprised them: and being asked if she was not afraid to be buried in a place so far from her own country, she answered: "Nothing is far off from God. Neither do I need to fear that God will not find my body to raise it with the rest." Five days after this she was seized with a fever; and one day being worse than ordinary, she swooned away, and was for a little while insensible. (3) Her two sons ran to her. When she came to herself, awaking as it were out of a profound sleep, she said to them: "Here you shall bury your mother." Austin stood silent; Navigius wished that she might not die abroad, but in her own country: but she, checking him with her eyes, said to them: "Lay this body any where: be not concerned about that. The only thing I ask of you both is, that you make remembrance of me at the altar of the Lord wheresoever you are." (c) Her distemper growing stronger upon her, she suffered much, and on the ninth day of her illness, in the fifty-sixth year of her age, and of our Lord 387, that religious and pious soul was loosed from the body. St Austin, who was then thirty-three years of age, closed her eyes; and though his grief was extreme, restrained his tears and those of his son Adeodatus, thinking that weeping did not become the funeral of her, who neither died miserably, nor at all as to her principal and better part. The corpse was carried to the church, and when it was set down by the grave, according to the custom of the place, the sacrifice of our ransom was offered for her. St Austin had hitherto held in his tears; but calling to mind, when alone, her holy and pious conversation towards God, and her tender and affectionate love and care of her children, of which he was so suddenly deprived, he gave free scope to his tears. He adds: "If any one think it a sin that I thus wept for my mother some small part of an hour; and a mother who many years had wept for me, that I might live to thy eyes, O Lord: let him not deride me for it; but rather, if his charity be great, let him weep also for my sins before thee." He prays for her in his Confessions, and beseeches God to inspire all who shall read his book, to remember at the altar Monica and Patricius. He says: "I pray for the sins of my mother: hear me by the remedy of our wounds, who hung on the cross, and sitting on the right-hand intercedes for us. I know she shewed mercy, and forgave from her heart all debtors: forgive her also her debts." (d) Her body was translated from Ostia to Rome in 1430, under pope Martin V. and remains there in the church of St Austin. The history of this translation of the relicks of St Monica to Rome, with an account of several miraculous cures with which it was honoured, is given by pope Martin V. himself. (4) Some pretend this to be the body of St Prima; and that the remains of St Monica are kept at Arouaise, a convent of regular canons near Bapaume, in Hainault, whence the head was translated to the church of St Amatus in Douay. (e) But the latter seems to be the body of St Pri-

(3) St Aug. Conf. l. 9 c. 11. 12. 13.

(c) Tantum illud vos rogo, ut ad Domini altare memineritis mei ubi fueritis. Conf. l. 9. c. 11.

(4) Martin V. Sermo ad Fratres Augustinienses de Translatione corporis S. Monicæ Ostia Romam, printed at Rome in 1586. also in an express bull published with the usual solemnities in 1430, &c. See Berti de St Monica, c. 7. 8. 9. 10.

(d) Nunc pro peccatis matris meæ deprecor te exaudi me, per medicinam vulnerum nostrorum quæ pependit in ligno, et sedens ad dexteram tuam te interpellat pro nobis. Scio misericorditer operatam, et ex corde dimisisse debita debitoribus suis; dimitte illi debita sua, si qua contraxit per tot annos post aquam salutis. Dimitte, Domine, dimitte obsecro: ne intres cum ea in iudicium; promisti misericordibus misericordiam, &c. Non ista mandavi nobis, sed tantummodo memoriam sui ad altare tuum fieri desideravit, cui nullius diei prætermissione servavit, unde sciret dispensari viciniam sanctam qua diletum est cibographum quod erat contrarium nobis. Conf. l. 6. c. 13.

(e) Walter, a canon regular of Arouaise, relates that in 1162 he brought thither the relicks of St Monica, called by the Latins Prima, found ma, whom Walter, who conveyed this treasure from Ostia into the Low Countries, in 1162, imagined to be the same person with St. Monica ; though her body remained long after at Ostia.

St Monica, by her earnestness to gain her son to God, is the model of good mothers. She was persuaded that he did not live, nay that his state was infinitely more miserable than if he had had no existence, so long as he lived not to Him who made him, and who was his only happiness, and his last end, as she proved to him, with admirable penetration, from the principles of sound philosophy, in a conference with him and his friends soon after his conversion, of which, to the honour of her memory, he has preserved us a part in one of his works. Her perseverance in tears and prayers for his conversion could not fail of success ; being supported by fervour, perfect purity of intention and sanctity of life, and accompanied with all prudent measures which it was in her power to take for bringing him to his duty. In vain some mothers flatter themselves that by their long devotions they satisfy this difficult obligation : they are bound also to watch continually over their children, to give and procure them constant instructions, to set before them good example, and to use, when necessary, reprimands and correction, which must be tempered with mildness and affection, be seasonably employed at the times when likely found in a brick sepulchre at old Ostia nearer the sea than the present ruins of Ostia. Henschenius and Papebroke maintain this relation true and genuine. But it depends on the single testimony of an unknown person : and the narrative betrays itself. Ostia was built by Ancus Martius thirteen miles from Rome, where the Tiber divides itself into two channels, where it has always stood, though now its ruins only remain. Monica in Greek does not signify Prima, but Unica or Solitaria. Walter tells us that pope Adrian died in 1161, whereas his death happened in 1159, when Alexander III. succeeded him. Walter probably mistook the sepulchre of St Prima for that of St Monica. See Berti de Rebus Gestis S. Aug. Com. de S. Monica, c. 11. 12. p. 254. If those who, upon the credit of Walter, take the relicks of St Prima for those of St Monica, are mistaken, they cannot be charged with superstition, God in his servant Monica being the object of their devotion : nor are they conscious of any forgery in the relict or symbol.

to take best effect, and must always be free from the least motion or appearance of passion. This condition can only be observed by those who have obtained an entire mastery over themselves. Pride and self-love are always impatient, and sure to shew themselves on such occasions: and wherever they appear, instead of healing a heart already disordered, they usually inflame and increase the evil. Monica converted Patricius, and made a deep impression upon the heart of Austin in the midst of his disorders, because her remonstrances were free from this fault. If the instructions and watchfulness of a St Monica could not preserve Austin from the snares of bad company, what precautions are not parents bound to take, to keep unexperienced youth from the possibility of falling upon this most fatal rock?

ON THE SAME DAY.

St GODARD, Bishop of Hildesheim, C. He was a native of Bavaria, and abbot of Altaich in that country, and reformed likewise the abbeys of Hersfeld in Hesse, of Tergensee in the diocese of Frisinguen, and of Chremsmünster in that of Passaw. In 1021, the episcopal chair of Hildesheim falling vacant by the death of St Bernward, St Godard was compelled by St Henry to take upon him that pastoral charge. The relief of the poor, both spiritual and temporal, was every where the first object of his attention. He died on the fourth of May 1038, and was canonized by Innocent II. in 1131. Many places in Germany acknowledge him patron, and several bear his name. See his life by Wolthert, his disciple, in Henschenius, p. 501, and in Mabillon: and more at large, with long histories of miracles, among the writers of the history of the most illustrious house of Brunswick-Hanover, T. 2. p. 483. Several very devout epistles of St Godard or Godehard are given us by Dom Pez in his Codex Diplomatico-Historico-Epistolaris, p. 133. &c.

MAY V.
ST PIUS V. POPE, C.

The two original most authentic lives of St Pius V. are that wrote by Jerom Catena, secretary to the cardinal of Alexandria, and consultor to several congregations in Rome, in Italian, highly approved by Sixtus V. the other in Latin by Ant. Gabutio, superior of the Regular Clerks of St Paul, much commended by Clement VIII. The titles of these two works are, Hieron Catena Vita del gloriosissimo Papa Pio V. & Raccolta di Littere di Papa Pio V. Gabutii de Vita Pii V. libri 6. Bzovius in his annals on Pius V. adds to this latter several particulars. See his Pius V. also Archangelo Caraccio, Brevis Narratio Gestorum Pii V. Minorelli, Ord. Prædic. Vita S. Pii V. Romæ, 1712. Apostolicarum Pii Quinti Epistolarum libri 5. operâ Fr. Gaubau. Ant. 1649. Paul Alex. Maffei, Vita di Pio V. Feuillet, Vie du Pape Pie V. Galesini Translatio Corporis Pii V. a Sixto V. celebrata. Agatio di Somma, whose Italian life of this saint was translated into French by Dom Felibien in 1672. Tournon, B. 28. T. 4. p. 306. and the remarks of Henschenius; ad 5. Maii, T. 1. p. 617.

A. D. 1572.

MICHAEL GHISLERI, known afterwards by the name of Pius V. was born at Bosco, a little town in the diocese of Tortona, on the 27th of January 1504. He was descended of a noble Bolognese family, but considerably reduced in its splendour and fortunes. In his tender years the most perfect maxims of piety were instilled into him, and he never swerved in the least from those principles during the whole course of his life. He studied grammar under the care of the Dominican friars at Voghera; and giving himself up entirely to the most fervent exercises of religion, took the habit of that Order when he was only fifteen years of age. He was sensible that faint and languishing endeavours never deserve to find the inestimable treasure of true virtue, which they undervalue; they are sure to lose ground, and at length to yield under the repeated assaults of the enemy: whereas fervour breaks down all obstacles, in the pursuit of perfection, as so many shadows, and courageously marches on, reckoning all labours the sweetest pleasures, and esteeming as nothing whatever leads not to this great end. It was the young novice's holy ambition to surpass all others in humility, modesty, and the exercises of mortification, obedience and devotion. In every thing he did, he set no bounds to the ardour of his desires to please God, and accomplish his holy will in the most perfect manner. Thus all his actions were perfect sacrifices of his heart, and the meanest were enhanced by the fervour of his intention. To his studies he joined assiduous prayer, watching, fasting and the exercises of penance and charity. After the uninterrupted fatigue of the day, it was his sweet refreshment to pour forth his soul in tears and devout prayer or meditation, for several hours before the altar, or in his cell. Having prepared himself by a long and fervent retreat, he was ordained priest at Genoa in 1528. He taught philosophy and divinity sixteen years, and was long employed in instructing the novices and in forming them to piety, and in governing different houses of his Order: in all which offices, he laboured effectually to revive the spirit of its holy founder. He never accepted of any priory but by compulsion, and with tears. No one would he ever allow to absent himself from the choir, or to go out of the convent without some urgent necessity. Constant devotion and study he called the double breast from which religious persons draw a spiritual nourishment which maintains in them the love of God and contempt of the world. Though he went often to Milan to hear the confession of the marquis of Guast, governor of the Milanese, he could never be persuaded to buy a cloak to defend him from the rain, saying, "poor followers of the gospel ought to be content with one tunic." His journey he performed on foot, in recollection and strict silence, unless he opened his mouth to speak to his companion something on God. Pope Paul IV. in 1556, promoted him to the united bishoprics of Nepi and Sutri in the ecclesiastical state, notwithstanding the tears he shed in endeavouring most earnestly to decline that dignity. Under his care these dioceses soon assumed a new face. In 1557, he was created cardinal by the same pope under the title of St Mary upon the Minerva, though generally known by that of the Alexandrin cardinal, from Alexandria a city in Lombardy, a few miles distant from the place of his birth. His dignities served to render his humility and other virtues more conspicuous, but produced no alteration in his furniture, table, fasts or devotions. He was most scrupulously cautious in the choice of his few necessary domestics, admitting none but persons of most exemplary piety, and he treated them as his children rather than as his servants. Pope Paul IV dying in 1559. he was succeeded by Pius IV. of the family of Medicis, who translated our good cardinal to the bishopric of Mondovi in Piedmont, a church reduced by the wars to a deplorable and calamitous condition. The saint hastened to his new flock; and by his zealous exhortations and other endeavours re-established peace and union, reformed abuses, and restored the splendour of that church. But an order of his Holiness recalled him to Rome for the dispatch of certain public affairs of the church. When Pius IV. proposed to the sacred college the promotion of prince Ferdinand of Medicis, only thirteen years old, to the dignity of cardinal, our saint opposed the motion with such vigour, that he made himself admired by the whole consistory for his zeal and prudence. The emperor Maximilian II. wrote to pope Pius IV. to desire that priests might be allowed to marry, as a means that might facilitate the return of the modern sectaries to the communion of the church. The whole sacred college saw the inconveniences of such an abolition of the most holy and ancient canons; but none spoke more vigorously against it than our saint. Though charity will allow all condescension that is possible, here it seemed very unseasonable on many accounts to abandon so sacred a spiritual law; and this in favour of men, who had shewn no disposition towards a reconciliation with the catholic church, except she would give up many other points, not only of discipline, but also of her faith and doctrine.

Pope Pius IV. after a tedious illness expired in the arms of St Charles Borromeus on the 9th of December 1565, having filled the chair almost six years. St Charles, when he saw that the pious cardinal Sirlet, who was first proposed, could not be chosen, united the suffrages of the conclave in favour of our saint, testifying an entire confidence in his virtue. All others applauded the choice, except the pope elect; who having in vain opposed it by tears and intreaties, at length, for fear of resisting the call of God, gave his consent, on the seventh of January 1566, and took the name of Pius. The largesses, usually bestowed by the popes, at their coronation, on the people of Rome, he converted into alms, to avoid the disorders of intemperance, &c. to which they are liable. He accordingly directed the sums, usually expended on such occasions, to be distributed among the poor in the hospitals and elsewhere. He in like manner sent to the poorer convents in the city the thousand crowns usually employed in an entertainment for the cardinals, ambassadors and lords, who assisted at the ceremony. His first care was to regulate his family in such a manner that it might be a model of virtue, and he induced the cardinals to do the like in their respective houses. He forbade the public exhibition of the fights of wild beasts, as savouring too much of inhumanity: and published very severe regulations against excesses in taverns, and against detraction committed in public assemblies, and re-established a strict observance and execution of the laws. By rigorous edicts he banished numbers of lewd women under pain of corporal punishment, if found afterwards within the city: others he confined to an obscure part of Rome, under the same penalty, if they were seen elsewhere. He said mass every day (and usually with tears) unless hindered by sickness; he made daily two meditations on his knees before a crucifix, and called prayer the comfort and support of a pastor amidst the hurry of affairs. His tenderness for the poor and his charities are not to be expressed: but nothing appeared more admirable in him than his sincere and profound humility. An English Protestant gentleman was converted by seeing the condescension and affection with which he kissed the ulcers of the feet of a certain poor man. His rigorous fasts and abstemiousness he would scarce ever mitigate even on account of sickness. He published the catechism, and the decrees of the council of Trent, which he laboured strenuously to carry into immediate execution; and made many other useful regulations, extending his solicitude to every part of Christendom, particularly the eastern missions. He generously assisted the knights of Malta when they were besieged by the most formidable armies of the Turks, and by his liberalities enabled them to repair their breaches after their victories, and to build the new impregnable city of Valette, in 1566. (a)

(a) The knights of Malta, or of St John of Jerusalem, were originally called knights hospitallers, instituted by certain merchants of Amalphi, in the kingdom of Naples, who trading in the Levant, obtained leave of the Caliph of the Saracens to build a house at Jerusalem for themselves and pilgrims, on paying an annual tribute. Soon after they founded a church in honour of St John Baptist, with an hospital for sick pilgrims; from which they took their name. The valiant and most pious prince Godfrey of Bouillon, who took Jerusalem in 1099. exceedingly favoured these hospitallers, who in the reign of Baldwin I. king of Jerusalem in 1104, added to their three religious vows, another by which they obliged themselves to defend the pilgrims in the Holy Land from the insults of the Saracens. From that time they became a military Order of knights, and wore for their badge a cross with eight points. In 1187, Saladin, the Caliph of Syria and Egypt, wrested Jerusalem for the last time from the Christians, after the kingdom of the Latins had maintained itself there eighty nine years, under eight kings. The knights retired to Acon or Acre, anciently called Ptolemais, on the sea-coast in Palestine, till that strong fortress was taken by storm by the Saracens in 1291. From which time they resided in Cyprus till, in 1310, they gallantly took Rhodes from those infidels, and the year following defended it against their furious assaults, being relieved by the seasonable succours brought by the brave Amadeus IV. count of Savoy. The Turks having vanquished the Saracens, and embraced their superstition, and Mahomet II. having taken Constantinople by storm. in 1453, under Constantine Paleologus, the last Grecian emperor, these knights became more than ever the bulwark of Christendom. Under the conduct of the valiant grand master Aubusson, in 1480, they bravely defended their isle for two months against the victorious army, of above 100,000 men, of Mahomet II. the greatest warrior of all the Turkish emperors, who conquered the two empires of Constantinople and Trebizonde, 12 kingdoms and 200 cities. But Soliman II. surnamed the Magnificent, after a gallant defence made by the knights. rendered himself master of this strong fortress by the treachery of the chancellor of the Order, in 1522; and the grand master Villiers l'Isle-Adam, after prodigies of valour, was obliged to seek a new retreat. The emperor Charles V. gave the knights the isle of Malta in 1530. Solyman II. in 1566, bent the whole strength of his empire against this small island; but after a vigorous siege of four months his army was shamefully repulsed, by the most memorable defence that is recorded in history, under the conduct of the grand master John de Valette, assisted by the munificence chiefly of pope Pius V. The Turks retreated with 80,000 men, when the grand master had only 6000. The knights of this Order are obliged to make proof of their being nobly descended for four generations, both by the father and mother's side, and upon their admission pay 250 crowns in gold to the treasury of the Order. They make the three religious vows, consequently can never marry; and add a fourth, never to make peace with infidels. They observe certain constitutions borrowed from the rule of the regular canons of St Austin. Formerly this Order consisted of eight languages or nations; but the English, which was the sixth, was extinguished by king Henry VIII. Each language is divided into certain grand priories: and every grand priory into several commanderies. Servant-knights prove their nobility; but not for four descents. The chaplains must also be of noble extraction. The Donnes or Demi-Crosses are not strictly members of the body: may marry, and wear a gold cross of three branches; those of the knights having four. The grand master is chosen by the priors. There are servants of the office who are employed in the hospitals. The chief end of this military Order is to defend the innocent, and protect and cover Christendom from the insults of the Mahometans; in imitation of the Macchabees, who with the zeal of martyrs defended the people of God in the old law.

The rebellions raised in France under Charles IX. obliged him to exert his vigilance in protecting the city and territory of Avignon against the stratagems

Raymund du Puy was the first grand master after they commenced knights. He drew up the statutes of the Order, and died in 1160. Several saints which this Order has produced are honoured at Malta; on whom see Le Martyrologe des chevaliers de Malte, par Mr Goussancour, two tomes. And as to its many great heroes, and the glorious military exploits achieved by them, read the history of Malta by Abbe Vertot, though in this he has not equalled the reputation of his other works and has failed not only in the style, but also in sentiments and exactitude.

The knights of Malta are obliged, after their profession, to wear a white cross or star with eight points, sewed on the left side of their cloak or coat. But before their vows they wear a gold cross, with eight points, enamelled with white, hanging at a black ribband. The knights may defer their vows, and seldom make them till sure of

of Coligny. He purged the ecclesiastical state of assassins and robbers, but rejected the perfidious proposal of one who offered to invite the chief captain of the robbers to dinner, and then to deliver him up.

of a commandery. The languages of Malta now subsisting are called, of Provence, Auvergne, France, Italy, Arragon, Germany and Castille. France alone having three languages, it is the most powerful in the Order. In Spain other military religious Orders flourish; as those of Alcantara and Calatrava, instituted upon the taking of those towns from the Moors; they are subject to the Cistercian rule, but the knights are not hindered by their vow from marrying once. In Portugal that of Avis is likewise under the Cistercian rule: it was re-established after the victory of Evora, over the Moors, and confirmed by Innocent IV. in 1234.

The knights Templars, of whom we sometimes make mention, were instituted by seven gentlemen at Jerusalem, in 1118, to defend the holy places and pilgrims from the insults of the Saracens, and keep the passes free for such as undertook the voyage of the Holy Land. They took their name from the first house which was given them by king Baldwin II. situated near the place where anciently the temple of Solomon stood. By the liberality of princes, immense riches suddenly flowed into this Order, by which the knights were puffed up to a degree of insolence which rendered them insupportable even to the kings who had been their protectors; and Philip the Fair, king of France, resolved to compass their ruin. They were accused of treasons and conspiracies with the infidels, and of other enormous crimes, which occasioned the suppression of the Order by a decree of pope Clement V. and the general council of Vienne, in 1312. The year following the grand master, who was a Frenchman, was burnt at Paris, and several others suffered death, though they all with their last breath protested their innocence as to the crimes that were laid to their charge. These were certainly much exaggerated by their enemies, and doubtless many innocent men were involved with the guilty. A great part of their estates was given to the knights of Rhodes or Malta.

The Teutonic knights owe their establishment to certain German gentlemen from Bremen and Lubec, at the siege of Acon or Acre in Palestine, who instituted this Order in imitation of the knights Templars and Hospitallers. It was approved by Calixtus II. in 1192. The Teutonic knights conquered in 1250 the infidels of Prussia, whom the Polanders had not been able to subdue, and built the cities of Elbing, Marienbourg, Thorn, Dantzic and Koningsberg. The Poles disputed several of these territories with them. At length Albert, marquis of Brandenburg, grand master, embracing Lutheranism with several of the knights, quitted the title of grand master, and drove the Order out of Prussia, which he left to the house of Brandenburg. From which time the Order is reduced to a few poor commanderies, and the grand master resides at Margentheim or Mariendal in Franconia.

His severity, which was necessary for the public tranquillity, did not make him forget that mercy, wherever it can be allowed to take place, is to be the favourite inclination of a disciple of Christ. A certain Spaniard had composed a bitter and seditious pasquinade, filled with notorious slanders, against his Holiness, for which the magistrate had confiscated his estate, and condemned him to death : but the pope granted him a free pardon, with this mild request, that when he should see him fall into any fault, he would admonish him of it. By a bull dated the 1st of October 1567, he condemned several erroneous propositions ascribed to Michael Baius of Louvain, some of which that doctor denied to have been advanced by him, others he with great humility retracted. To recompense the zeal of Cosmus of Medicis, duke of Florence, he granted him by a bull the title of Grand Duke, and crowned him as such at Rome in 1569, though the emperor refused for some time to acknowledge that new title. By a great number of wise regulations he endeavoured to extirpate various scandals and abuses : in a brief by which he strongly enforces the canons relating to the respect due to holy places, amongst other things, he forbids any either to give or ask an alms in churches, but only at the doors ; which is commanded by several councils, to prevent an occasion of distractions, and an abuse contrary to the silence and respect due to the house of prayer. Certain privileges granted to particular confraternities seem to have given occasion in some places to too great a neglect of these wholesome and necessary canons.

Notwithstanding his attention to the public affairs, the good pope did not forget that the exercises of an interior life, are the means by which our souls must maintain and improve the spirit of holy charity, and by it sanctify our exterior actions. Prayer and holy meditation were his delight ; for he well knew that the fire of charity will soon be extinguished in the heart, unless it be continually nourished by new fuel. St Pius joined to prayer assiduous mortification, and large alms. He often visited the hospitals, washed the feet of the poor, kissed their ulcers, comforted them in their sufferings, and disposed them for a Christian death. He gave 20,000 crowns of gold to the hospital of the Holy Ghost, and great and frequent charities to other hospitals; he founded a distribution of dowries for the marriage of poor women, and made many most useful pious foundations to perpetuate the honour of God, and the salvation of souls, particularly for the instruction of youth in the Christian Doctrine, which he earnestly recommended to all pastors by an express bull in 1571. In the time of a great famine in Rome he imported corn at his own expence from Sicily and France, to the value of above one hundred thousand gold crowns; a considerable part of which he distributed among the poor gratis, and sold the rest to the public much under prime cost. Frugal in all things that regarded himself, he was enabled by his good œconomy to make many useful foundations for promoting virtue and religion, and to relieve the distressed by incredible general almsdeeds, and public benefactions, exclusively of the large daily demands which particular charities made upon him. He was a great encourager of learning and learned men; and to him the schools are indebted for the most accurate edition of the works of St Thomas Aquinas, which appeared in 1570. He wrote to queen Mary Stuart, in 1570, to comfort her during her long imprisonment suffered for religion.

Selimus II. emperor of the Turks, pursuing the ambitious and boundless designs of his father Solyman, proposed nothing less to himself than to overrun all Christendom with his arms, and to add all the western kingdoms to his empire. Though he was himself an effeminate tyrant, enervated by drunkenness and debaucheries, he was long successful in his wars, by the conduct of veteran soldiers and experienced generals, who had been trained up by his warlike father. Flushed with victories and elated with pride, when Italy was afflicted with a famine, and the great arsenal of Venice had been lately almost entirely destroyed by a dreadful fire, he haughtily demanded of that republic the peaceable surrender of the isle of Cyprus by way of satisfaction for pretended injuries; though in reality for the sake of its excellent wine, with which liquor he was extremely besotted, though forbidden by the alcoran ; threatening that in case of refusal he would force it from them. Having all things in readiness before hand, the infidels immediately invaded the island, took Nicosia by storm in 1570, after a siege of forty-eight days, and in 1571, Famagusta by capitulation, after having battered that city with above 1,500,000 canon shot, during a siege of seventy-five days. Notwithstanding the articles of an honourable capitulation had been ratified by the most solemn oaths, the Bashaw Mustapha, by an unheard of treacherous perfidy, put to most cruel deaths all the brave Venetian officers of the place ; and caused the valiant Venetian governor Brigadin, after cutting off his ears and nose, with a thousand insults, blasphemies and torments, continued or repeated for many days, to be flayed alive in the market-place : all which he suffered with admirable patience, and in great sentiments of piety, expiring when his skin was torn off to his waist. Alarmed at the danger which threatened all Christendom, St Pius entered into a league with Philip II. king of Spain, and the Venetians, in order to check the progress of the Mahometans ; the other Christian princes excusing themselves from acceding to it on account of domestic broils. This alliance was ratified in May 1571 ; and to avoid occasions of dissension among the princes that were engaged, the pope was declared chief of the league and expedition, who appointed Mark Antony Colonna general of his gallies, and Don John of Austria, generalissimo of all the forces. The army consisted of 20,000 good soldiers, besides seamen : and the fleet of 101 great gallies, some tall ships, and a considerable number of galliots and small vessels. The pope, together with his apostolic benediction, sent to the general a prediction of certain victory, with an order to disband all soldiers who seemed to go only for the sake of plunder, and all scandalous and riotous persons, whose crimes might draw down the divine indignation upon their arms.

The Christians sailed directly from Corfu, and found the Turkish fleet at anchor in the harbour of Lepanto. so soon as the Turks saw the Christian fleet so near, they reinforced their troops from the land, and sailed out in order of battle. Don John kept the center, and had for seconds Colonna and the Venetian general Venieri: Andrew Doria commanded the right wing, and Austin Barbarigo the left. Peter Justiniani, who commanded the gallies of Malta, and Paul Jourdain, were posted at the extremities of this line. The marquis of Sainte Croix had a body of reserve of sixty vessels ready to sustain or relieve any part in danger of being overpowered. John of Cordova, with a squadron of eight vessels, scoured before, to spy and give intelligence; and six Venetian galleasses formed an avant-guard to the fleet. A little after sun-rise the Turkish fleet, consisting of 330 sail of all sorts appeared in sight, almost in the same order of battle, only, according to their custom, in form of a crescent; they had no squadron of reserve, and therefore their line being much wider, they far out-fronted the Christians, which is a great advantage in battle. Hali was in the center, facing Don John of Austria; Petauch was his second; Louchali and Siroch commanded the two wings against Doria and Barbarigo. Don John gave the signal of battle, by hanging out the banner sent him from the pope, on which the image of Christ crucified was embroidered. The Christian generals harrangued their soldiers in few words, then made a sign for prayers; at which the soldiers fell on their knees before a crucifix, and continued in that posture in fervent prayer till the fleets drew near to each other, when at a second signal the battle began. The Turks bore down with great rapidity on the Christians, being assisted by a brisk gale of wind, which promised them the greatest advantage possible, especially as they were superior in numbers, and in the extent of their front. But the wind, which before was very strong, fell just as the fight began, was succeeded by a calm, and this soon after by a high wind entirely favourable to the Christians; which carrying the smoke and fire of their artillery upon the enemy, almost blinded them; and at length quite bore them down. The battle was most obstinate and bloody, and the victory the most complete that ever was gained over the Ottoman empire. After three hours fight, with equal advantage, the left wing commanded by Barbarigo, got the better, and sunk the galley which Siroch was in, who had fought to admiration. His loss so dispirited his squadron, that being vigorously pressed by the Venetians, it gave way, and made towards the coast. Don John seeing this advantage of his right wing, was animated with new courage, doubled his fire, and killed Hali, the Turkish general, boarded his gally, pulled down his flag, and cried, Victory; after which it was no longer a fight, but a perfect slaughter in the center, the Turks suffering themselves to be killed without making any resistance. Louchali indeed, by his numbers and wider front, kept Doria and the right wing at a distance, till the marquis of Sainte Croix coming up to join him, the Turk made all the sail he could, and escaped by flight with thirty gallies, all the rest being either taken or sunk.

(1) This battle was fought on the 7th of October 1571, and continued from about six in the morning till evening, when the approaching darkness and the roughness of the sea obliged the Christians to betake themselves to the next havens. The Turks, with their haughty emperor, were seized with the utmost consternation at the news of their dreadful overthrow: and the city of Constantinople was as much alarmed as if the enemy had been at the gates: many of the inhabitants carried their treasures to the Christians to keep for them, as if the town had been already in their hands. The infidels, who, elated by their rapid conquests in the East, had already swallowed up in their imagination Italy and all the rest of Christendom, were taught by this defeat that the tide of their victories was stemmed. God, who has set bounds to the raging billows of the sea, and who weighs in his hand the globe of the universe as a grain of sand, fixes limits to states and empires, and governs their revolutions. By abandoning many flourishing nations to the infidels, he has given a terrible instance of his justice, by which he admonishes others whom he has hitherto spared, though perhaps more guilty, to fear his anger, and by sincere repentance to sue for mercy, whilst it is yet offered them. It is owing to his clemency towards the remaining part of Christendom, that he bridled the fury of these most fierce and barbarous infidels in the very height of their pride and prosperity. From that time the Turks (b) have gradually

(1) See Gratiani's History of Cyprus.

(b) The Turks derive their pedigree from a Scythian nation of Great Tartary, not from the Turcomans in Armenia and Assyria, nor from Turkistan in Great Tartary, as some have fancied : though both those nations seem also of Scythian extraction. The original country of the Turks, according to prince Cantemir, was Chuter or Kitaia, that is, Great Tartary, in the provinces above the Caspian sea, which was as inexhausted a hive in sending out numberless swarms, as the European Scythia and Sarmatia. The Turci were anciently a most numerous and powerful nation, spread in European Scythia, now Muscovy, near the Volga, where from the time of the emperor Mauritius they are often mentioned by Constantine Porphyrogenita (l. de rege. imperio, ad Romanum Filium: & l. de Legationibus.) and by other Byzantine historians. They were also dispersed wide in Asia above the Caspian sea ; and this was perhaps the original country of the Turci, whence some tribes had passed into Europe. M. de Guignes (Histoire Generale des Huns, des Turcs, &c. T. 3.) shews that the Huns came originally from the Eastern part of Tartary that borders upon China, and that by wars with the Chinese, and various domestic revolutions, they were driven by several migrations to the West, some to the Volga, others about the Caspian sea. They were afterward called Turks. Among the Asiatic Turks or Tartars Gingschan (which word in the Mogul language signifies King of Kings) a prince of the Oguzian Tartars, about the year 1200, conquered Mogul and Persia, and entirely overthrowing this last empire, erected upon its ruins a new one comprising all the East, so far as was known to the Greeks. This great conqueror dying in 1224 ; one of his sons succeeded him in Persia, another in Mogul and a third in part of Tartary ; in other places his governors made themselves independent. The Turks are descended of another branch of these Oguzian or Gingschan Tartars. The example of Gingschan excited Soliman Shah, prince of Nera, a city on the coast of the Caspian sea, and head of a wandering tribe of the same Tartars, to tread in his steps. With 50,000 select soldiers, he passed Mount Caucasus, and bending his course towards Asia, overran several countries in 1211 : but was drowned in attempting to pass the Euphrates on horseback, in 1219. His sepulchre is shewn near Aleppo, and held by the Turks in great veneration to this day. His sons often served with their forces under the Saracen Sultans who were then masters of the Eastern parts of the Grecian empire : sometimes with them, and sometimes alone, they plundered the provinces of the Greeks, and about that time renounced idolatry to embrace Mahometism, the superstition of the Saracens. Othman, one of the descendants of Soliman Shaw, re-dered.

weakened themselves by their own domestic policy, and have at present reason to dread the arms of those Christian powers, to whom their very name was formerly a terror. In the battle at Lepanto the infidels lost 30,000 men with their general Hali, and above 200 ships and gallies, besides ninety that were stranded, burnt or sunk. There were taken 116 pieces of great canon, 256 smaller, and 5000 prisoners, with a great number of officers of rank, among whom were two sons of Hali, nephews to the Grand Signior. The booty was exceeding great; for the Turkish fleet was laden with the plunder of many merchantmen, and of several islands: 15,000 slaves, that were found chained on board their gallies, were set at liberty.

The holy pope from the beginning of the expedition had ordered public prayers and fasts, and had not ceas-

dered great services to Aladin, the Saracen Sultan of Iconium, till that prince, compelled by intestine commotions, abandoned his dominions, and fled to the emperor Michael Palæologus who kept him in perpetual imprisonment. Upon this revolution, Othman easily obtained the sovereignty of Aladin's country, and laid the foundation of the Turkish monarchy at Iconium, about the year 1300. He afterwards conquered Bithynia, and took the city of Prusa in 1326, where he fixed his residence. From him is the imperial Turkish family called Othmans or Ottomans. Tamerlane, the founder of a great empire in Tartary, a generous and valiant prince, to defend the Grecian empire against the perpetual encroachments of the Turks, fell upon the latter, took their Sultan Bajazet, and kept him prisoner in an iron-cage, having defeated him, not near Prusa, as the Greeks suppose, but near the banks of the Euphrates, as prince Cantemir proves from the unanimous consent of all Turkish and other oriental monuments. Notwithstanding this check, the Turks extended their conquests over both the Saracens and Greeks, till Mahomet II. took Constantinople in 1453, and Trebizond in 1456. The Persians called both the Gingschan Scythians, by whom they were conquered, and these Othmans, by the same name, Turks; which name is given the latter by all foreigners. This account of the original of the Turkish nation is given us by prince Demetrius Cantemir, in his History of the Othman empire, printed in 1743. It is drawn from the Turkish and oriental memoirs, and agrees with what is recorded by Chalcondylas, the only historian among the Greeks who deserves credit concerning the first transactions of this nation. Prince Cantemir observes, that the Turks own the Crim Tartars to be descended from the same Ogusion tribe, by a younger branch to that of the Othmans; and the Turks have often declared that if the Othman family fail, that of Crim Tartary is to succeed to their empire.

ed to solicit heaven, with uplifted hands like Moses on the mountain, besides afflicting his body by watching and fasting. At the hour of the battle the procession of the Rosary, in the church at the Minerva, was pouring forth solemn prayers for the victory. The pope was then conversing with some cardinals on business: but on a sudden left them abruptly, opened the window, stood some time with his eyes fixed on the heavens, and then shutting the casement, said: "It is not now a time to talk any more upon business; but to give thanks to God for the victory he has granted to the arms of the Christians." This fact was carefully attested, and authentically recorded both at that time, and again in the process for the saint's canonization. (2) In consequence of this miraculous victory the pope ordered the festival of the Rosary to be kept on the first Sunday of October, in perpetual thanksgiving to God, and in the litany of our Lady inserted those words: succour of Christians. He caused a triumph to be decreed Don John, which was graced with many illustrious prisoners; and he bestowed honours and gratifications on other generals and officers. The year following he was preparing to pursue the advantage gained by this great victory, when he died of the stone, on the 1st of May 1572, being 68 years, 3 months, and 15 days old, having governed the church 6 years and almost 4 months. He had suffered from January the sharpest pains with heroic patience. He was beatified by Clement X. in 1672, and canonized by Clement XI. in 1712. His precious remains lie in the church of St Mary Major. Many miracles are recorded by Gabutius. Hepschenius has added a relation of many others approved by the auditors of the Rota under Urban VIII. in 1629. (3)

The greatest danger in a public elevated station is; as St Bernard pathetically put his disciple whom he saw raised to the popedom in mind of, lest in the hurry of external concerns we should forget to give sufficient attention to those of our own souls, and lose ourselves in the wilderness or tumult of distracting thoughts and employments. But those who have their whole time at their own disposal, yet have their eyes always abroad, and live as it were without themselves, are truly foolish. Every one's first and principal business is included within himself, in his own heart. It is so deep that we shall always find in it exercise enough, and shall never be able to sound it: only He who tries the thoughts and reins can thoroughly know it. What have we to do to concern ourselves so much with the wars of states, and the quarrels of private persons? But it is infinitely both our duty and our interest to take cognizance of the contests between the flesh and the spirit within our own breasts: to appease this intestine war by teaching the flesh to be in subjection, placing reason on its throne, and making God reign sovereignly in our hearts. It is not so slight a task as men generally seem to imagine, to keep our domestic kingdom in good order, and to govern wisely and holily those numerous people which are contained in this little state, that is to say, that multitude of affections, thoughts, opinions and passions, which easily raise tumults in our hearts. Those who are charged with the care of others, are obliged to reserve to themselves leisure for pious meditation, prayer and self-examination, and diligently to watch over their own souls. He who is bad to himself, to whom will he be good? (4)

(2) See card. Lambertini, afterward Benedict XIV. de Beatif. & Canoniz. Sanctor. T. 1. p. 524. (3) Bolland. T. 1. Maij. p. 714. 719.

ST HILARY, ARCHBISHOP OF ARLES, C.

From his life by a cotemporary bishop of his province, who had been his disciple Ceillier shews this author to have been St Honoratus, bishop of Marseilles. See Rivet, Hist. Liter. de la France, T. 2. p. 209.

A. D. 449.

THIS saint was nobly born about the year 401, and was related to St Honoratus of Arles, and of the same country in Gaul, which was probably Lorrain, or some other part of Austrasia. He was brought up, in a manner suitable to his birth, in the study of the liberal arts, and of every branch of polite learning, especially of eloquence and philosophy. But how little value we ought to set on all things that appear great in the eyes of the world he himself has taught us. "We are all equal," says he, "in Jesus Christ, and the highest degree of our nobility is to be of the number of the true servants of God. Neither science, nor birth, according to this world, can exalt us, but in proportion to our contempt of them." Before God had put these sentiments into his heart, he seems to have been not altogether insensible to the advantages of this world, in which he was raised to the highest dignities. His kinsman, St Honoratus, who had forsaken his country to seek Christ in the solitude of the isle of Lerins, where he had founded a great monastery, was the instrument made use of by the Almighty to open his eyes. This holy man had always loved Hilary, and thought he could not give him more solid proof of his friendship, than by endeavouring to gain him entirely to God. He therefore left his retirement for a few days to seek him out, and endeavoured to move him by the same powerful, weighty reflections which had made the deepest impression on his own mind, and induced him to break the chains of the world, "What floods of tears," says St Hilary, "did this true friend shed to soften the hardness of my heart? How often did he embrace me with the most tender and compassionate affection, to obtain of me that I would take into serious consideration the salvation of my soul? Yet, by unhappy victory, I still remained conqueror." Honoratus, finding his endeavours to wean him from the charms of a deceitful world ineffectual, had recourse to prayer, his ordinary refuge. "Well," said he to Hilary, "I will obtain of God what you will not now grant me." Upon which they took leave of each other. Hilary, reflecting on what Honoratus had said to him, was not long before he began to feel a violent conflict within himself. "On one side, (says he,) methought I saw the Lord calling me; on the other, the world offering me its seducing charms and pleasures. How often did I embrace and reject, will and not will the same thing? But in the end Jesus Christ triumphed in me. And three days after Honoratus had left me, the mercy of God, solicited by his prayers, subdued my rebellious soul." He then went in person to seek St Honoratus, and appeared before him as humble and tractable as the saint had left him haughty and indocile.

Ecol. xiv. 5.

From this moment there appeared in Hilary that wonderful change which the Holy Ghost produces in a soul which he truly converts. His words, looks and whole comportment breathed nothing but humility, patience, sweetness, mortification and charity. Every one saw in him a man who began to labour in earnest to save his soul, and who had put his hand to the plough to look no more behind him, or to send a single thought after what he had left for Christ's sake. Aspiring to perfection he sold all his several estates to his brother, and distributed all the money accruing from the sale among the poor, and the most indigent monasteries. Thus disengaged from the world, and naked, no less in the inward disposition of soul, than in his exterior, he, like Abraham, took leave of his own country, and made the best of his way to Lerins; where from his first entrance he made it appear, that he was worthy to live in the company of saints. He set out in the pursuit of monastic perfection with such zeal and fervour, as to become in a short time the pattern of those, on whose instructions and example he came to form his own conduct. His application to prayer and mortification, and his watchfulness, and care to avoid the smallest faults and imperfections, prepared him to receive the gift of tears. It is thought that his baptism was posterior to his retirement. St Honoratus having been chosen archbishop of Arles in 426, Hilary followed him to that city; but it was not long before his love of solitude occasioned his return to Lerins. All the holy inhabitants of that isle testified as great joy to receive him again, as he felt to see himself among them. But God, who had other designs upon him, did not permit him to enjoy long his beloved retirement. St Honoratus begged his assistance, and the comfort of his company, and as he did not yield to intreaties, went himself to fetch him from Lerins. Soon after God called St Honoratus to himself, his death happening in 428 or 429. Hilary, though sensibly afflicted for the loss of such a friend, rejoiced however to see himself at liberty, and set out directly for Lerins. But no sooner were the citizens apprised of his departure, than messengers posted after him with such expedition, that he was overtaken, brought back, and consecrated archbishop, though only twenty-nine years of age.

In this high station the virtues which he had acquired in solitude shone with lustre to mankind. The higher he was exalted by his dignity, the more did he humble himself beneath all others in his heart. He reduced himself in every thing to the strictest bounds of necessity: and he had only one coat for winter and summer. He applied himself diligently to meditation on the holy scriptures, and preaching the word of God, was assiduous in prayer, watching and fasting. He had his hours also for manual labour, with a view of gaining something for the poor; choosing such works as he could join with reading or prayer. He travelled always on foot, and had attained to so perfect an evenness of temper, that his mind seemed never ruffled with the least emotion of anger. He had an admirable talent in preaching. When he spoke before the learned of the world, his elocution, his accent, his discourse, his action, were such as the greatest orators justly admired, but despaired ever to come up to. Yet when he instructed the illiterate, he changed his manner of address, and proportioned his instructions to the capacities of the most simple and ignorant, though always supporting the dignity of the divine word by a manner and expression suitable to its majesty. He preached the truth in its purity, without flattering the great. He had often in private admonished a certain judge in the province, of a criminal partiality in the administration of justice, but without effect. One day the magistrate came into the church, attended by his officers, while the saint was preaching. The holy bishop broke off his sermon on the spot, and gave his surprised audience for reason, that he who had so often neglected the advice he had given him for his salvation, was not worthy to partake of the nourishment of the divine word. The judge no sooner heard this reflection, but withdrew in confusion, and the saint resumed his discourse. Observing one day that many went out of the church immediately after the reading of the gospel, just as he was going to preach, he prevailed with them to return, by saying: "You will not so easily get out hell, if you are once unhappily fallen into its dungeons." He had such a love for the poor, that, to have the more to bestow on them, he lived himself in the greatest poverty; he never kept a horse, and laboured hard in digging and manuring the ground, though educated according to the dignity of his family. To redeem captives, he caused the church plate to be sold, not excepting the sacred vessels; making use of patens and chalices of glass in the celebration of the divine mysteries. If his compassion for the corporal miseries of the faithful was so tender, we may judge how much more he was moved to pity at their spiritual necessities. He bore the weak with tenderness, but never indulged the passions or sloth of any. When he put any one in a course of penance he was himself bathed in tears; whereby he both excited the penitent to the like, and with ardent sighs and prayer obtained for him of God the grace of compunction and pardon. He visited the bishops of his province, and endeavoured to make them walk in the perfect spirit of Christ, the prince of pastors. He established many monasteries, and took particular care to enforce a strict observance of monastic discipline among them. He had a close friendship with St Germanus, whom he called his father, and respected as an apostle. He presided in the council of Ries in 439, in the first council of Orange in 441, in the council of Vaison in 442, and probably in 443, in the second council of Arles, in all which several canons of discipline were framed.

His zeal exasperated several tepid persons; and some of these, by misconstruing his actions, gave the holy

pope St Leo a disadvantageous character of him. His zeal indeed had been on some occasions too hasty and precipitate : but this was owing in him to mistake, not to passion ; for the circumstances of his actions, and of his eminent piety, oblige us to interpret his intention by the same spirit by which he governed himself in his whole conduct. This disagreement between St Leo and St Hilary proved a trial for the exercise of zeal in the former, and of patience in the latter, for his greater sanctification, by humility, submission and silence. Chelidonius bishop of Besançon, had been deposed by St Hilary upon an allegation, that, before he was consecrated bishop, he had married a widow, and had condemned persons to death as a magistrate ; both which were looked upon as irregularities or disqualifications for holy orders. Chelidonius hereupon set out for Rome, to justify himself to the pope, St Leo, who received his appeal from his metropolitan, and acquitted him of the irregularity with which he stood charged. St Hilary, upon hearing that his suffragan was gone for Rome, followed him thither on foot, and in the midst of winter. The pope having assembled a council to judge this affair, St Hilary took his seat among the other bishops that composed it : but from his not attempting to prove the irregularity which had been alleged against Chelidonius, the saint seemed to own that he had been imposed on as to the matter of fact. But he pretended, that the cause ought not to be judged otherwise than by commissaries deputed by the pope, to take cognizance of it in the country that gave it birth, a point for which some Africans had contended. This plea was overruled, the contrary having been frequently practised, when both parties could appear at Rome : though the manner of judging appeals is only a point of discipline, which may vary in different places. Another affair brought St Hilary into a greater difficulty. Projectus, a bishop of his province, being sick, St Hilary upon information hastened to his see, and ordained a new bishop : after which Projectus recovering, there were two bishops contending for the same see, and Hilary supported the last ordained ; perhaps because the first might remain disabled for his functions. The author of St Hilary's life does not clear up his conduct in this particular : but we cannot doubt of the sincerity of his intention. Moreover the discipline of the church in such matters was not at that time so clearly settled by the canons as it has been since. St Hilary therefore imagined a metropolitan might have a discretionary power in such matters. However, St Leo rightly judged such an ordination irregular, liable to great inconveniences, and productive of schisms. Wherefore he forbade St Hilary to ordain any bishops for the future. Our holy prelate cancelled his mistakes by his patience, and St Leo, writing immediately after the saint's death to his successor Ravennus calls him, Hilary of holy memory. (1) Exhausted by austerities and labours St Hilary passed to a better life on the fifth of May 449, being only forty eight years old. St Honoratus, the eloquent bishop of Marseilles, (a), who has given us an abstract of his life, relates several miraculous cures wrought by the saint whilst he was living. His body lies in a subterraneous chapel, under the high altar, in the church of St Honoratus at Arles, with an elegant ancient epitaph. The name of St Hilary stands in the Roman martyrology.

That this saint never gave into the Semi-Pelagian doctrine, though it had not been then condemned by any decree of the pastors of the church, is clearly shewn by Tillemont (2) and Dom Rivet. (3) This is proved from several passages in his life by St Honoratus ; and, in the martyrologies of Rabanus and Notker, it is mentioned that he vigorously exerted his zeal in bringing to light and in correcting the Pelagian heresy, which is taught

(1) Ep. 37. ad Ravenn. p. 256. (2) T. 12. p. 482. T. 15. p. 63.
 (3) Hist. Liter. T. 2. p. 274. See also Henschenius, 5. Maij. p. 34.

(a) This St Honoratus of Marseilles, who was many years a disciple of St Hilary of Arles, and was bishop of Marseilles from 483 to 494, is commended for his eloquence and piety by Gennadius, a priest of his church, in his catalogue of illustrious men which he wrote in 494, for a continuation to that of St Jerom. See the life of St Honoratus of Marseilles in Dom Rivet, Hist. Liter. T. 2. p. 644.

in the conferences of Cassian. (b) His exposition of the Creed, commended by the ancients, is now lost: his homilies on all the feasts of the year were much esteemed, but are not known at present. The best edition of his works is given by John Salinas, regular canon of St John Lateran, in Italy, in 1731.

ON THE SAME DAY.

St ANGELUS, Carmelite friar, M. He was of Jewish parents, and a native of Jerusalem. Being converted to the faith, he embraced the austere life of certain anchorets on the banks of Jordan; from whom he passed to the hermits of the desert on mount Carmel. He seems to have been one amongst them at the time when the blessed Albert drew up a rule for them in 1205: at least he became one of the first friars of that holy Order. Coming to preach in the West, he was massacred by the heretics at Licate or Leocata in Sicily in 1225, by the contrivance of a powerful rich man, whose incest with a sister he had severely reproved, and had converted her from that scandalous life. The annals of the Order furnish the most material circumstances of his glorious death, and the account of his miracles. See Papebroke the Bollandist, T. 2. Maij. p. 56. who sets no great value on any of the three different acts or relations of his martyrdom, but gives long accounts of miracles performed since his death, and of the great veneration which is paid to him in Sicily, especially at Leocata and at Palermo. See also on St Angelus the new Bibliotheca Carmelitana, printed Orleans, in 1752, T. I. p. 113.

(b) The authority of Cassian drew many in the territory of Marseilles into the error of the Semipelagians, who denied the necessity of grace to the beginning of faith, or to the desire of a good work. Some have thought St Hilary of Arles to have been of this number, because St Prosper says, that some of these adversaries of St Austin had been lately raised to the episcopal dignity. But this may be understood of some others. Or St Hilary perhaps did not relish St Austin's manner of expressing himself on the doctrine of gratuitous predestination to glory. But as to the Semipelagian error, though it was not yet condemned by the church, St Hilary always adhered to the doctrine of the church. And St Honoratus tells us, that when he lay on his death-bed, in his last exhortation to his clergy to resist the enemy of their souls, he made use of these words: "We cannot fail meeting with conflicts in our road to bliss; but we may attain it by the succour of preventing grace, and its consequent labours." See l'histoire du Pelagianisme, à Avignon 1763. T. 2. c. 7. p. 33.

St MAURONT, Abbot. He was born in the year 634, and was baptized by St Riquier. Being the eldest son of blessed Adalbold, an illustrious French nobleman of royal blood, and of St Rictrudes, of a most noble family in Gascony or Aquitain, his high birth promised him the first honours of the kingdom, and his capacity and integrity made him superior to the greatest affairs. He passed his youth in the court of king Clovis II. and the holy queen Bathildes, and discharged in it many honourable employes. On the death of his father he became lord or duke of Douay, and succeeded to his other large estates, came home into Flanders to settle his concerns and to marry a rich young lady, a treaty having been already concluded for this purpose. But God designed him for a state of greater perfection, and his instrument for bringing this about was St Amand, bishop of Maestricht, who then led a retired life in his monastery of Elnone. Mauront was so touched by a discourse of this holy prelate on the vanity and dangers of the world, that he went directly to the monastery of Marchiennes founded by his mother. There he soon received the clerical tonsure from St Amand, and after some years was made deacon and prior of Hamaye or Hamaige, half a league from Marchiennes, on the Scarp. He built himself a new monastery called Breüil, on his estate of Merville, a considerable town near St Venant, in the diocese of Terouanne, and, when it was finished, was chosen the first abbot. His father Adalbold had two brothers, Sigefrid, count of Ponthieu, and Archenald, Maire of the Palais to Clovis II son to Dagobert, to whom they were related. After the death of Adalbold, whom the poet, who celebrated St Rictrudes, styles duke of the people of Douay, (a) his brother Archenald rebuilt the castle of Douay (which gave rise to the town) and founded the church of our Lady, now called St Amatus's. (1) St Amatus, on being banished by king Theodoric III. was committed to the care of Mauront, who profited exceedingly by the saintly conversation of that holy confessor; whom he so much respected, that he resigned to him his abbacy, and lived under his obedience, but was obliged to resume his charge upon the death of that holy bishop in 690. He was also abbot of the monks at Marchiennes, whilst his sister Clotsenda was abbess of the separate house of nuns, this being at that time a double monastery. St Mauront died there in the seventy-second year of his age, of Christ 706, on the fifth of May, on which day he is commemorated in the Belgic martyrologies. Merville, the ancient Minariacum of Antoninus, having been plundered by the Danes or Normans towards the end of the ninth century, Charles the Simple, king of France, transferred the community of monks from Breuil to our Lady's church at Douay, which had been founded by Archerald, St Mauront's uncle. At the same time the body of St Mauront, with that of St Amatus, was translated from Breuil to Douay, and both are there kept enshrined in the church of St Amatus, which, since the secularization of the monastery in 940, is a collegiate church of canons. In its archives, and in the ancient calendars of the cathedral of Arras, St Martin's at Tournay, Liesse, &c. St Mauront is styled sometimes Levite or Deacon, and sometimes Abbot: by which he seems never to have been ordained priest. His body is kept in a rich shrine in this church, in which is a chapel sacred to his name and his parents, where his statue is seen betwixt those of his parents. He is represented holding in his right hand a sceptre, and in his left a building with a tower or belfry. The abbey of St Guislin in Hainault possesses his scull in a shrine of silver gilt. The cathedral of Arras and some other churches shew particles

(a) Duci Duwacorum.

(1) Grammaic, in Duaco, Buzelin, Annal. Flandr. Locrius, Chronicon Belgicum, Silvius Baldericus Castilion, Sacra Belgii Chronol. p. 38.

of his relicks. (b) On his life consult Heubald the monk, in his life of St Rictrudes, the archives of the church of St Amatus in Douay, copied by Bazelin in his accurate Gallo-Flandria, and Annales Flandrici, and by Henschenius, T. 2. Majj. p. 53. See also Miræus, Malbrancq, Lœcius, Grammaye, Sylvius Baldricus, Le Cointe. an. 638, n. 97. Molanus, &c.

St AVERTIN, C. He was an holy deacon who attended St Thomas of Canterbury in his exile, and in all his troubles. After the martyrdom of that prelate, Avertin consecrated himself to the service of the poor and strangers at Vinzai, a village in Touraine, where he happily ended his course about 1189. See the new martyrology of Evreux, that of Tours, &c. on the 5th of May.

MAY VI.

ST JOHN BEFORE THE LATIN GATE.

From St Jerom in Jovin. T. 1. p. 14. Tertullian, Præscr. c. 36. Tillem. T. 1. p. 338. & l'Historia della Chiesa di S. Giovanni avanti Porta Latina, Scritta da Gio Mario Crescimbeni. Roma 1716. 4to.

A. D. 95.

WHEN the two sons of Zebedee, James and John, strangers as yet to the mystery of the cross and the nature of Christ's kingdom, had, by their mother Salome (1), besought our Lord to allot them the two first places in his kingdom (implied by sitting at his right and left-hands, he asked them whether they were disposed to drink of his cup, or, in other words, to suffer with him, in which case they should not fail to be considered in proportion to their pains and fidelity.

(1) Matt. xx. 21. Mark x. 35.

(b) The B. Rictrudes besides Mauront had three other children. 1. The B. Clotsenda, her eldest daughter, abbess of Marchiennes after her death, honoured on the 13th of June. 2. St Eusebia or Isoye, chosen abbess of Hamaye (Hamaticum) at twelve years of age, about the year 646, where she succeeded Gertrude, grandmother to Adalbold, who with St Amand had founded the double monastery of Marchiennes. 3. B. Adalsend, a nun under her at Marchiennes, honoured on the 24th of December. Adalbold is commemorated on the 2d of February. See Molanus, Nat. Sanct. Belg.

The two disciples answered boldly in the affirmative, assuring their divine Master that they were ready to undergo any thing for his sake. Our Lord thereupon foretold them that their sincerity should be brought to the trial, and that they should both be partakers of his cup of sufferings, and undergo bitter things for the honour and confirmation of the Christian religion. This was literally fulfilled in St James, on his being put to death for the faith by Herod: and this day's festival records in part the manner in which it was verified in St John. It may be said, without any violence to the sense of the words, that this favourite disciple, who so tenderly loved his Master, and was so tenderly beloved by him, drank of his chalice, and experienced a large share of its bitterness, when he assisted at his crucifixion; feeling then in his soul, by grief and compassion, whatever he saw him suffer on the cross. This was further fulfilled after the descent of the Holy Ghost, when he underwent the like imprisonment, scourging, &c. with the other apostles, as is recorded in the fifth chapter of the Acts. But our Saviour's prediction was to be accomplished in a more particular manner, and still more conformable to the letter, and which should entitle him to the merit and crown of martyrdom; the instrument whereof was Domitian, the last of the twelve Cæsars.

He was a tyrant detestable to all men on account of his cruelty, and the author of the second general persecution of the church. In the beginning of his reign he accustomed himself to take pleasure in acts of inhumanity, spending part of his time in his closet in catching flies, and sticking them with a sharp bodkin. He debauched his own niece, and impiously took the titles of God and Lord, as Suetonius and Eusebius have recorded. He reigned fifteen years, that is, from the year of Christ 81 to 96. Tacitus says, that in cruelty he surpassed Nero, who often shunned the sight of barbarous executions, whereas Domitian was known to take delight in beholding them. He deluged Rome with the blood of its illustrious citizens, and out of a hatred of virtue banished the philosophers, on which occasion, Epictetus (whose Enchiridion is the most perfect abstract of the justest sentiments of moral virtue ever published by a heathen) and Dio Chrysostomus, with others, were expelled the city. As for the Christians, not only the sanctity of their doctrine and manners was the strongest reproach of the crimes of the tyrant, but the general hatred of the heathens against them excited him to glut his insatiable cruelty with their innocent blood, St John who was the only surviving apostle, and who at that time governed all the churches of Asia, with the highest reputation which his dignity, extraordinary virtue, and miracles, had acquired, was apprehended at Ephesus, and sent prisoner to Rome in the year 95. The emperor did not relent at the sight of a man of his most venerable old age and countenance, which alone might suffice to command respect, but condemned him to a most barbarous death, by ordering him to be cast into a cauldron of boiling oil. The holy apostle was probably first scourged, according to the Roman custom with regard to criminals before execution, who could not plead the privilege of being Roman citizens. It is at least certain from Tertullian, St Jerom and Eusebius, that, by the order of the tyrant, he was thrown into a vessel of boiling oil. The martyr doubtless heard with great joy this barbarous sentence, exulting at the thought of speedily rejoining his Redeemer, and desiring to repay love for love in the best manner he was able, and to die for Him who had laid down his most precious life to save us sinners from hell. The most cruel torments seemed to him light and most agreeable, because they would, he hoped, unite him for ever to his divine Master and Saviour: but God accepted his will, and crowned his desire; he conferred on him the honour and merit of martyrdom, but suspended the operation of the fire, as he had formerly preserved the three children from hurt in the Babylonian furnace. The seething oil was changed in his regard into a refreshing bath, and the saint came out more fresh and lively than he had entered the cauldron. Domitian, with most of the heathens, entertained a great idea of the power of magic, in which he had been confirmed by the reports concerning the prodigies pretended to be wrought by the famous magician, Apollonius of Tyana, whom he had sent for to Rome. He therefore saw this miracle without drawing from it the least advantage, but like another Pharaoh remained hardened in his iniquity. However, he contented himself after this with banishing the holy apostle into the little island of Patmos, one of the Sporades in the Archipelago or Ægean sea. Domitian being assassinated the year following, his statues were every where pulled down, his name erased from all public buildings, and his decrees declared void by the senate. Upon which St John returned to Ephesus in the reign of Nerva, who by mildness, during his short reign of one year and four months, laboured to restore the faded lustre of the Roman empire.

This glorious triumph of St John happened without the gate of Rome called Latina, because it led to Latium. A church was consecrated in the same place in memory of this miracle, under the first Christian emperors, which has always borne his title. It is said to have been a pagan temple of Diana, before it was converted to the worship of the true God. It was rebuilt by pope Adrian I, in 772. This festival has been kept in many places a holy-day. In the twelfth century, and probably long before, till the change of religion, it was observed in England a holyday of the second rank, in which all servile work was forbid, except agriculture. Our pious Saxon ancestors had a singular devotion to St Peter, and St John the Evangelist.

Our divine Saviour, as a mark of his special favour, and to put their love to the test, asked his two disciples James and John, whether they could drink of the cup of which he was to drink. His sufferings he called his cup; 1st, because out of the excess of his love for man he was pressed with a burning desire to suffer and die for his redemption, as with a vehement thirst which nothing but the ignominies and cruel torments of his cross could satiate. (2) O ardent desire of

(2) Luke xii.

Jesus to suffer for us! O love of his cross! 2dly, Because among the Jews a portion which fell to a person's lot was called his cup, Jesus by this expression gives us to understand that his cross and sufferings were allotted him by his eternal father as his portion, and that from the first moment of his Incarnation he accepted it cheerfully from his hands with an entire submission to his will, offering himself as a victim perfectly to accomplish it. He presents his cup to his servants to drink, because there is nothing which produces in them so perfect a conformity with himself, or improves more wonderfully all heroic virtues in their souls, or obtains more abundantly for them the greatest graces, provided we bear our cross with him, embrace it affectionately for his love, and offer our sufferings to him, uniting them with his. O precious cross! you are the high royal road to heaven, sanctified and made divine by our sovereign head, who opened it, and shewed the way in which, all his elect follow him. St John suffered above the other saints a martyrdom of love, being a martyr, and more than a martyr at the foot of the cross of his divine master, with the true lovers of Jesus, Magdalen and the blessed Virgin mother. All his sufferings were by love and compassion imprinted in his soul, and thus shared by him. O singular happiness of St John, to have stood under the cross of Christ, so near his divine person, when the other disciples had all forsaken him! O extraordinary privilege, to have suffered martyrdom in the person of Jesus, and been eye-witness of all he did or endured, and of all that happened to him in that great sacrifice and mystery! (3) Here he drank of his cup; this was truly a martyrdom, and our Saviour exempted all those who had assisted at the martyrdom of his cross, from suffering death by the hands of persecutors. St John nevertheless received also the crown of this second martyrdom, to which the sacrifice of his will was not wanting, but only the execution.

(3) Joan. xix. 26.

ST JOHN DAMASCEN FATHER OF THE CHURCH.

From the works of the saint, and the histories of those times. His life written by John IV. patriarch of Jerusalem, who lived two hundred years after him, borrows the first part, before his monastic profession, from uncertain memoirs. See Nat. Alex. sæc. 8: Fleury, b. 42. Papebroke, May 6. Ceiller, T 18. p. 110.

A. D. 780.

MAHOMET, the great impostor, subdued a considerable part of Arabia before his death, which happened in 632. His successor Abubeker extended his conquests into Chaldea and Persia. Omar, the second caliph of the Saracens, subdued Palestine, Syria, Mesopotamia and Egypt before the death of the emperor Heraclius in 641. Othman the third caliph died in 655, and Ali the fourth, in 660. This last founded the sect of Mahometanism which the Persians follow, and which the Turks and others, who adhere to the interpretations of his predecessors Omar and Othman, detest above all other religions. Such was the posture of affairs in the East when St John was born, in the declension of the seventh century, at Damascus, from which city he received his surname: by the Saracens he was called Mansur. He was of a noble and ancient family, and his father, though always a zealous and pious Christian, was held in great esteem by the Saracen caliphs for his high birth, probity and abilities; was advanced by them to the first employments of the state, and made their chief secretary or counsellor. The pious statesman was the more watchful and fervent in all duties of religion, the greater the dangers were to which he saw his faith exposed. Being chiefly solicitous for the education of his son in innocence and piety amidst the dangers of such a court, he purchased the liberty of a learned and devout Grecian monk named Cosmas, who having been taken prisoner by the Saracens, was brought to Damascus for sale, Him he appointed tutor to his son, and to another youth called Cosmas, the charge of whose education he had taken upon himself. The preceptor entered into the views of the zealous parent, and bent his whole attention to defend the tender plants from the rude winds of trials and temptations. The caliph was much taken with the capacity and virtue of John, and, after the death of his father, made him governor of Damascus, his capital city. After Ali, the dignity of caliph had passed into another family called the Ommiads. The name of the first of these was Moavia. This prince and his immediate successors treated the Christians with courtesy and mildness : and so great were the abilities, and such the transcendent virtue of John, that he enjoyed his prince's favour without envy. But he always trembled at the sight of those spiritual dangers with which he saw himself surrounded. He was sensible that in a flow of plenty and prosperity the heart is apt to warp towards vice and the world, and he dreaded the contagion of the air he breathed. He therefore at length came to a resolution to resign his honours, and soon after disposed of his estates in favour of the church and the poor, and with Cosmas, his companion, withdrew secretly to the great Laura of St Sabas, near Jerusalem. Cosmas was afterwards chosen bishop of Majuma, in Palestine.

St John in his solitude rejoiced to see himself delivered from the slavery of the world, and placed in a happy state of uninterrupted tranquillity ; where his years passed away without one heavy minute, and where he had no other occupation but that of employing, without distraction, all his thoughts and endeavours on the end of his creation, the securing the salvation of his soul. He considered the important work which he had upon his hands, and set himself in earnest to learn perfectly to subdue his passions, and walk in the paths of true virtue. With this view he addressed himself to the superior of the Laura, who gave him for director an experienced old monk. This great master in a spiritual life, conducting the novice to his cell, gave him the following short lessons : First, that he should never do his own will, but study in all things to die to himself in order to divest himself of all inordinate self-love or attachment to creatures. Secondly, That he should frequently offer to God all his actions, difficulties and prayers. Thirdly, That he should take no pride in his learning or any other advantage, but ground himself in a sincere and thorough conviction that he had nothing of his own stock but ignorance and weakness. Fourthly, That he should renounce all vanity, should always mistrust himself and his own lights, and never desire visions, or the like extraordinary favours. Fifthly, That he should banish from his mind all thoughts of the world, nor ever disclose to strangers the instructions given him in the monastery; that he should keep strict silence, and remember that there may be harm even in saying good things without necessity. By the punctual observance of these rules, the fervent novice made great progress in an interior life and Christian perfection. His director, to promote his spiritual advancement, often put his virtue to severe trials. He once sent him to Damascus to sell some baskets, and having set an exorbitant price on them, forbade him to take less. The saint obeyed his director without the least demur, and appeared poor and ill clad in that great city, in which he had formerly lived in splendor. On being asked the price of his ware, he was abused and insulted for the unreasonableness of his demands. At length one that had been formerly his servant, out of compassion purchased his whole stock at the price he asked; and the saint returned to his superior victorious over vanity and pride. It happened that a certain monk being inconsolable for the death of his brother, the saint by way of comforting him, recited to him a Greek verse, importing, that all is vanity which time destroyeth. His director, for his greater security against the temptation of vanity, or ostentation on account of learning, called this a disobedience in speaking without necessity, and by way of chastisement turned him out of his cell. The humble saint wept bitterly to heal this wound of disobedience in his soul, as he confessed it to be; and without endeavouring to extenuate the fault, though in itself so excusable, begged the monks to intercede for him to his director for pardon. This was at length obtained, but only on condition that with his own hands he should cleanse out and carry away all the filth that lay about the monastery : which condition the saint, to whom humiliations were always welcome, most cheerfully complied with.

So accomplished a virtue made his superiors judge him worthy to be promoted to the priesthood, which was then much more rare in monasteries than at present. This dignity served only to increase his humility and fervour. His director at length thought him sufficiently grounded in habits of profound humility and self-denial, to be permitted to employ his talents in writing for the edification of others and the service of the church, without falling into the dangerous temptation of self-conceit and pride. For a secret vanity or self complacency often robs even the Christian writer of the fruit of his labours before God ; and an eminent author calls this base weakness of vanity the last foible of great geniuses. John had given proof, by long and severe trials, that an entire contempt of himself, and a feeling sense of his own weakness and absolute insufficiency, were deeply rooted in his heart, when his superiors thought him sufficiently armed against this snare, to be employed in teaching their theological schools. Soon after, they ordered him to take up his pen in defence of our holy faith attacked by the Iconoclast heretics. The emperor Leo the Isaurian had published his edicts against holy images in 726, and had found many followers when St John entered the lists against that heresy. He begins his first discourse or oration on this religious subject as follows : " Conscientious to myself of my own baseness and unworthiness, I ought rather to condemn myself to an eternal silence, weeping and confessing my sins before God. But seeing the church, which is founded on a rock, assailed by a furious storm, I think I ought no longer to remain silent, because I fear God more than an emperor of the earth." He lays down, for the foundation of the dispute, that the church cannot err : consequently it could never fall into idolatry (1). He explains what is meant by the adoration due to God alone, which with St Austin and other fathers he calls Latria; and that inferior veneration which is paid to the friends and servants of God, which is entirely different, and infinitely beneath the former; and no more inconsistent with it than the civil honour which the law of nature and the holy scriptures command us to pay to princes and superiors. He shews that the veneration which we pay to the things which belong to God, as altars, &c. is not less distinct from the supreme honour we give to God. He says the precept in the old law which forbid images (if it be not to be restrained to idols) was merely ceremonial, and only regarded the Jews; which law if we restore we must equally admit circumcision and the sabbath. He testifies that the Iconoclasts allowed a religious honour to be due to the holy place on mount Calvary, to the stone of the sepulchre, to the book of the gospels, to crosses and sacred vessels. Lastly, he proves the veneration of holy images by the testimony of the fathers. In his second discourse he teaches at large that the emperor is intrusted with the government of the state, but has no authority to make decisions in points of ecclesiastical doctrine. In the third, he demonstrates the use of holy images from the tradition of the fathers.

The dogmatical writings of this great doctor shew the extent of his genius still more than his controversial; and in them the strength and clearness of his reasoning can be equalled only by the depth of his penetration, and the soundness of his judgment (a). His most im-

(1) Or. 1. de Cultu Imag.

(a) Though the philosophy of Plato was then generally in vogue, this able master adopted that of Aristotle, as Boëtius had done among the Latins. He cleared his physical principles of that obscurity in which they lay involved, and set their truth in a proper light: and having made himself perfectly master of his system of logic, or laws of the art of reasoning, he reduced them to certain general methodical rules, in which a tedious prolixity is avoided, and this noble art, the key of sciences, is rendered easy and clear, without any embarrassed questions, and that froth of school subtillies with which the portant and celebrated work is, The exposition of the orthodox faith, divided into four books, in which he reduces all the branches of theology, which the ancients explained in several scattered works, into one regular body, which gives this sublime study the advantage of excellent method, connects all its parts in a short system, and sets them all together in one clear point of view (b). This work was the first plan of the schola-

Arabian afterwards clogged it. This eminently useful art, hath by the abuse of some, been made a nuisance. to perplex and cloud the understanding, and to engross all the attention and time which are due to more sublime attainments, for the sake of which logic is chiefly necessary. Whereas, when confined to its proper boundaries, it is not only introductory to science, by giving to our ideas the utmost clearness, precision and justness, and by teaching us the laws of true and close reasoning, but it improves the judgement, and enlarges the faculties of the mind above all other studies. Theology without its aid is a science without arms. Nor are certain general principles of natural philosophy a less necessary foundation to it. To answer these purposes, our holy doctor compiled his abstract of Aristotle's logic and physics. In his treatise On heresies, he chiefly abridges St Epiphanius, and those which were posterior to him. Theodoret and some others, though he gives an account of several heresies not mentioned by any other writer, and adds a confutation of Mahometism.

(b) In his first book, On the orthodox faith, St John treats of God and the divine attributes: in the second, of the creation, angels, man, liberty and predestination: in the third, of the incarnation: in the fourth, of the sacraments, &c.

That nothing might be wanting to this work he wrote his Parallels, in which he laid down the principal rules of morality, in passages extracted from the fathers confirmed by the oracles of the holy scripture. He wrote also a disputation with a Saracen, and other treatises against the Eutychians, Nestorians, Monothelites and Manichees, besides sermons, and the life of St Stephen the Younger, a monk and martyr under Constantine Copronymus in 766. In his treatise Of the Trinity, he explains that mystery, and the Incarnation: in his letter to Jordan on the Trisagion, he shews that the church addresses this triple repetition of Holy to one God subsisting in three Persons, not to the Son alone, and rejects the additions of the Syrian Monophysites or Eutychians, shewing that in these rites we are to make the tradition of the church our rule (p. 436.) In his letter On the Fast of Lent, he commends the general discipline, which was that of the church of Jerusalem, according to which the fast was continued for seven weeks, every day till sun-set, except on Saturdays and Sundays: the abstinence was observed for the first week only from flesh meat, yet with fasting till evening. This was called the preparation to Lent. The other six weeks the faithful abstained from all white meats, as eggs, cheese stic method of teaching divinity, which St Anselm introduced much later among the Latins. St John composed many holy canticles; and to his fellow-pupil Cosmas is the Greek church indebted for the greater part of the sacred hymns which it uses in the divine office.

St John travelled into Palestine, and also to Constantinople, to encourage the faithful, and to defend the use of holy images in the very seat of the persecutor Constantine Copronymus. But he returned again to the Laura of St Sabas in Palestine, where, being in the dominions of the Saracen caliph, he continued to defend the church by his pen. We have the unexcep-cheese and milk; and on the last or Holy Week no food was allowed but Xerophagie, or dry meats. The saint condemns not those who added an eighth week to Lent, though he prefers the common rule, and repeats his favourite maxim: "What is in itself good is not good, unless it be well done." (p. 490.) In his book On the eight capital Vices, he shews in what each consists, and explains the means by which they are to be vanquished; which he executes with greater precision than Cassian and St Nilus had done in their books on the same subject. With them he mentions Vain-glory as a distinct capital sin or mother-vice, which St Gregory and the Latins place under pride. St John Damascen gives a short description of virtues and vices in his book On Virtue and Vice. The discourse On those who are dead in Faith, is falsely ascribed to this father. In the second volume of the new edition are contained his commentaries on St Paul's epistles, and several homilies. The most complete edition of the works of St John Damascen was given at Paris by F. Le Quien, a Dominican friar, in two volumes folio, in 1712. This editor has added learned notes and seventeen dissertations; and promised to add in a third volume, several works which some by mistake have attributed to this father. Among these we have an history of Barlaam, an holy hermit, and Josaphat, the son of an Indian king, whom he instructed in the faith and in virtue, after his father is said to have educated him in a palace, where, during his youth, he had never heard that men die. This life is ascribed to St John Damascen in the English and some other editions: but in old manuscripts is attributed to other authors, and seems not to be the work of this father. It is entertaining and ingenious, and contains pious reflections. Though Barlaam and Josaphat are names of two holy persons, the greater part of this piece is thought to be a parable or allegory. See Huet sur l'origine des Rom. p. 66. A MS. copy of an Ety.ologicon of St John Damascen (which furnishes many useful corrections of Hesychius and Suidas) is mentioned in the Catalogus MSS. Bibliothecæ Bernensis, auctore J. R. Sinner, Bibliothecario, an. 1760. T. 1. Le Quien's edition is more accurately re-published at Verona in 1748.

tionable testimony of Dr Cave (2), that no man can have a sound judgement, who reading his works doth not admire his extraordinary erudition, the justness and precision of his ideas and conceptions, and the strength of his reasoning, especially in theological matters. But Baronius observes that he was sometimes led into mistakes with regard to historical facts, by faulty memoirs. John IV. patriarch of Jerusalem, extols his great skill in mathematics. Amidst his studies he was careful to nourish in his heart a spirit of devotion by constant recollection and daily contemplation. For it is the reflection of a great man, and an eminent scholar (3), writing to contemplative persons, "that without assiduous prayer, reasoning is a great dissipation of the mind, and learning often extinguishes the humble interior spirit of prayer, as wind does a candle." In another place he calls too close application to mathematics the death of the spirit of prayer, and adds: "Suffer not yourself to be bewitched with the enchantment of geometry. Nothing will sooner dry up in you the interior spirit of recollection and devotion." St John, to shun this rock, was careful that his studies should never degenerate into a passion; he never suffered them to dissipate his mind, or encroach on his exercises of devotion, or any other duties, and in his inquiries shunned all idle curiosity. Having by retirement prepared himself for his last passage, he died in his cell about the year 780. His tomb was discovered near the church porch of this Laura, in the twelfth century, as John Phocas testifies. (4)

St EADBERT, Bishop of Lindisfarne, C. Venerable Bede assures us, that this holy man excelled both in the knowledge of the holy scriptures, and in the observance of the divine precepts. All his life-time he was remarkable for his alms-deeds, and it was a law with him to lay aside yearly the tenth part of his goods for the poor. He was ordained successor to St Guthbert in the see of Lindisfarne in 687, and most worthily governed that church eleven years. It was his custom twice a year in Lent, and during forty days before Christmas, to retire into a solitary place, encompassed by the waters of the sea, where St Cuthbert had for some time served God in private before he went to the isle of Ferne. St Eadbert spent this time remote from all company, in abstinence, prayers and tears. St Cuthbert had been buried about eleven years when the brethren desired, with the approbation of Eadbert, to take up the bones of that eminent servant of God, whose life had been signalized by many illustrious miracles. Instead of dust, to which they expected they were reduced, to their great surprise they found the body as entire, and the joints all as pliable as if it had been living: all the vestments and clothes in which it was laid, were also sound, and wonderfully fresh and bright. The monks made haste to inform the holy bishop, who was then in his Lent-retreat, and they brought him part of the garments which had covered the holy body. These he devoutly kissed; and ordered that the blessed body should be laid in other garments, put into the new coffin which was made for the holy relicks, and for greater veneration placed above the pavement in the sanctuary. He added, that the grave, which had been sanctified by so great a miracle of heavenly grace, would not remain long empty. This was accordingly done, and presently after Eadbert, the bishop beloved of God, fell dangerously sick, and his distemper daily increasing, on the 6th of May following he departed to our Lord. His body was laid in St Cuthbert's grave, and over the place was deposited the uncorrupted body of that glorious servant of God. "Miracles, here wrought from time to time, in curing the sick, bear testimony to the merits of them both," says Bede. The same historian informs us, that St Eadbert covered with lead the church of Lindisfarne, which was dedicated by the archbishop Theodorus, under the patronage of St Peter. It had been formerly built by bishop Finan, after the Scottish fashion, of oak boards, and thatched with reeds. See Bede, Hist. l. 3. c. 25. l. 4. c. 29, 30. and his life of St Cuthbert, St Eadbert is named on this day in the Roman martyrology.

(2) Hist Liter. (3) Fenelon, ep. 155. (4) Phocas in Descript. Palestine.

MAY VII.

ST. STANISLAS, BISHOP OF CRACOW. MARTYR.

From his life elegantly written by Logi-us Dugloss. Also from Chromerus, Krantzius, B. 3. c. 12, 13, 14, &c. See Papebroke, T. 2. Maij. p. 198.

A. D. 1079.

STANISLAS SEZEPANOWSKI was born on the 26th of July 1030, at Sezapanow, in the diocese of Cracow. His parents, both of the most illustrious families of Poland, had passed 30 years together without issue, when this son was given them by heaven, after they had lost all hopes of children. They received him with thanksgiving to God, and devoted him from his birth to the divine service. The example of their extraordinary piety, charity to the poor, and constant practice of mortification, insensibly made impressions upon the tender heart of their son, which were strengthened by their assiduous instructions. Young Stanislas from his very infancy shewed an unusual affection for prayer, seriousness, and mortification; being very temperate in his meals, often secretly lying on the ground, and inuring himself to suffer cold and other inconveniences; in which acts of self-denial he was privately encouraged by his parents; who were far from giving into the preposterous fondness of many, who by a false tenderness too often make themselves the spiritual, and sometimes also the corporal, murderers of their offspring. Stanislas being sent to school, by his progress in learning surpassed the expectation and even wishes of his friends: yet was always more careful to advance in piety. He had no relish for superfluous amusements; the time allowed for recreation he abridged as much as health would permit, and the money which was given him for his pocket was always secretly employed in relieving the poor. When grown up, he was sent to pursue his studies at Gnesna, the first university in the kingdom, and thence to Paris. His mildness, modesty, simplicity and candour, joined with his capacity for learning, gained him every where as many friends and admirers as he had masters and acquaintance. After seven years spent in the schools of canon-law and divinity at Paris, refusing out of humility the degree of doctor, which was offered him, he returned home ; and, upon the demise of his parents, disposed of his plentiful fortune in favour of the poor. He received the holy order of priesthood from the hands of Lampert Zula, bishop of Cracow, and was by him made canon of his cathedral, and soon after his preacher and vicar-general. His assiduous sermons, animated by the spirit of God with which he was replenished, and supported by the example and sanctity of his life, produced a wonderful reformation of manners, and inspired many with a contempt of the world to follow Christ. Both clergy and laity had recourse to his advice in all spiritual concerns, from every part of the kingdom : and his diocesan, desirous of having him for his successor, made an offer to resign to him his bishopric ; but the saint's opposition proved a bar not to be removed. However, upon the death of Lambert, he found himself unable to withstand the united votes of the king, clergy and people, seconded by an express order they had obtained from pope Alexander II. for complying with their choice. Wherefore, not to resist the voice and will of heaven, he obeyed, and was consecrated bishop in 1072. This see, which had been formerly metropolitocal, had at that time lost its archiepiscopal prerogative.

Stanislas, seeing himself vested with the character of a successor of the apostles, studied to be such in his spirit and manners. His house was always crowded with poor, and he kept a list of all the widows and distressed persons. He was indefatigable in his functions, especially preaching, and scarce knew how to set bounds to his mortification and the exercises of prayer. He visited his whole diocese every year, and no irregularity, whether in clergy or laity, could pass unobserved by him : Boleslas II. was then king of Poland. This prince sullied the glory of his victories (having had great success against the Russians) by his unbridled lust and debaucheries, and by horrid acts of tyranny and injustice, which procured him the surname of the cruel. Though married, he was not ashamed to offer violence to several ladies of quality: and from private crimes broke at last into the most public and brutish extravagancies. Those who approached him durst not make him proper remonstrances: such was the dread of his fury. Stanislas, however, boldly laid before him in private the scandal and enormity of his conduct. The king endeavoured at first to extenuate his guilt; and when pressed closer by the saint, made some shew of repentance. But whatever impression his remonstrances might make upon his mind, it soon wore off, and the king fell into his usual disorders, and began to express his aversion against the good bishop, and to complain of his boldness; neither were flatterers wanting to inflame his resentment. The prince carried off, and kept by violence, a very beautiful woman, wife of Miecislav, a gentleman in the palatinate of Sirad, and had by her several children. The archbishop of Gnesna, and others of the episcopal order, that had free access to the king's person, were hereupon solicited by the nobility to carry their complaints to the king, and lay before him the enormity of his crime; but the fear of offending their sovereign stopped their mouths: and this their silence was construed by the people in no other light than that of a mercenary connivance. Stanislas was the only person that had the courage requisite to discharge this duty. Having accordingly recommended the success of the affair to God, he went to court at the head of several gentlemen and ecclesiastics, and once more conjured the king, upon the most pressing considerations, to put an end to his enormous and scandalous disorders. He concluded his remonstrance with telling him, that, if he persisted in his crimes, he ran the risk of being cut off from the communion of the faithful by the sentence of excommunication. This threw the king into a violent rage, who, regarding the saint's charitable expostulation as an insult not to be borne, gave a free loose to his passion, and vowed revenge. He had first recourse to calumnies. The saint having purchased, some years before, an estate of one Peter, a gentleman of Piotrawin, who was since dead, and settled it upon his church, the nephews of the deceased were inveigled to accuse the bishop, contrary to truth, that he had never paid for the premisses. The cause was pleaded before the king, and the witnesses of the payment durst not appear, having been privately intimidated by the king's agents. The Polish historians of later ages relate, that the saint, after three days spent in fasting and prayer, went accompanied with his clergy to the church of Piotrawin, which is in the palatinate of Lublin, and causing the grave to be opened, raised Peter to life, and brought him into open court, where he declared before the king and the assembly that the land was bought and paid for by Stanislas; after which, being led back to his grave, he again returned to his former state.

After this trial the king seemed reconciled with the saint: but the succeeding acts of cruelty which he exercised upon his subjects, to whom he became a more inhuman tyrant than he had been even to his conquered enemies at Kijow in Russia, stirred up again the zeal of the holy pastor; and when he could not be admitted into the king's presence, he zealously applied himself to fastings, tears and prayers, for his conversion. Seeing no remedy applied to the evils he deplored, he made the king a third visit, and endeavoured to open his eyes. But the prince, like a mad and desperate patient, who looks upon the physician that comes to cure him as his greatest enemy, threatened the saint with certain death, if he continued to disturb him. Stanislas still thought it his duty not to abandon his trust, and left nothing untried to compass his charitable ends; but, finding all measures ineffectual, he, after a fourth visit, excommunicated him. And having left orders with the canons of the cathedral to break off the church-office, in case the king, in defiance of the censure, should attempt to enter the church while the service was performing, he left the city and retired to St Michael's, a small chapel at a little distance from Cracow. Thither the king followed him with his guards, whom he ordered to massacre him on the spot: but going into the chapel with this intent, they were struck with such a respect and dread at the presence of the venerable bishop, that they durst not attempt it, telling the king that a great light from heaven had affrighted them, and prevented their executing his orders. The like happened to a second and a third troop: upon which the king went in himself to animate them to perpetrate the murder. Yet no one durst strike the man of God, till the king himself, calling them base cowards, rushed forward and dispatched him with his own hand. Then his life-guards fell on, and cut the martyr's body into pieces, which they scattered about the fields to be devoured by beasts and birds of prey. But eagles are said to have defended them, till the canons of his cathedral, three days after, gathered them together, and privately buried them before the door of the chapel, in which he was martyred. Ten years after the body was translated into the cathedral in Cracow in 1088, and honoured with innumerable miracles. The barbarous king forbade all marks of sorrow or mourning for his death. Pope Gregory VII. excommunicated the tyrant and all his accomplices in this sacrilegious act; and the unhappy prince, tormented with the rack of his own conscience, and seeing himself detested by all his subjects, fled out of Poland into Hungary, and there perished miserably, some say by becoming his own executioner. Stanislas was crowned on the 8th of May, 1079. He was solemnly canonized by Innocent IV. in 1253.

Many like this unhappy prince employ the first part of their lives to render the other miserable. Those who in their youth imbibe the maxims of the world, and regulate their minds and conduct by them, plunge themselves into an abyss of the most fatal errors and dreadful miseries. By indulging pride, self-love and spiritual sloth, they suffer their passions soon to grow rebellious, and when they become enslaved to them, fall into so strange a spiritual blindness, as to be no longer governed by the light of reason or faith. How carefully are we bound to guard our heart, even in our tender youth, that it may be a constant source of innocence and happiness? Who will discover to us all the illusions of our passions? all the snares they lay for us? We must watch these domestic enemies, and observe all their motions. In all our undertakings we must narrowly examine our own hearts, and ask them if some passion does not secretly steal into our souls, and seek some by-interest in what we do. We must particularly suspect whatever seems to lean toward our darling or ruling passions. These especially deceive us under a thousand disguises. Those which we mistrust most, put on the appearance of those against which we are less upon our guard. It is by this watchfulness to discover and curb their first irregular motions, by habitual self denial and assiduous prayer, that we shall purify and cultivate our hearts, and keep our enemies under due restraint, which is the victory of virtue.

ON THE SAME DAY.

St BENEDICT II. Pope, C. He was a native of Rome, and having been brought up from his infancy in the service of the church, was well skilled in the holy scriptures, and in the ecclesiastical chanting or church music, of which he was a devout admirer. To sing assiduously the divine praises on earth, is a kind of novitiate to the state of the blessed in heaven, and an employment the most sweet and comfortable to a soul that truly loves God. (a) Benedict was always humble, meek, patient, mortified, a lover of poverty, and most generous to the poor. Being ordained priest, he had a share in the government of the Roman

(a) The Cistercian breviary calls this the principal end and function of that holy Order; from an affectionate regard to which several monasteries take their name, as that of Laude, or De Laude Dei, &c. In the cathedral of Tours there is this epitaph of Ouvrande, a pious master of music:

*Laus divina mihi semper fuit unica cura;
Post obitum sit laus divina mihi unica merces.*

church under the pontificates of Agatho and Leo II. Benedict was chosen pope upon the death of the latter in 683, but to obtain the emperor's consent it was necessary to wait almost a year till the return of messengers sent to Constantinople. On which account the see remained vacant all that time, and Benedict was only ordained on the twenty-sixth of June 684. The emperor Constans II. grandson to Herachus, had endeavoured to establish in the East the Monothelite heresy during an uneasy reign of twenty-six years; but being slain by an Armenian servant at Syracuse in Sicily, in 668, his son Constantine Pogonatus, or the Bearded, ascended the throne, and put to death the man who had murdered his father, and who had been saluted emperor by the army in Sicily. Constantine was a most religious and orthodox prince, and reigned seventeen years with great glory. He concurred with pope Agatho in assembling the sixth general council at Constantinople, in 680. Pope Leo II. sent the decrees of the synod into Spain. After his decease, Benedict II. pursued the same affair, and the Spanish bishops in a council at Toledo approved and received the definition of faith published by the sixth general council. They dispatched to the pope a copy of their decree and confession of faith, with their subscriptions annexed, wherein they acknowledge two wills in Christ. Pope Benedict, however, observed in their confession certain obscure expressions, of which he desired a clearer explanation. For this purpose the fifteenth council of Toledo was held, in which they were expounded in a sense entirely orthodox. The bishops of Rome were anciently chosen by the clergy and people of Rome, according to the discipline of those times; the Christian emperors were the head of the people, on which account their consent was required. But whilst they resided in the East, this condition produced often long delays and considerable inconveniences. Pope Benedict represented this to Constantine, and that pious prince readily passed a law addressed to the clergy, the people, and the army at Rome, allowing that the person by them elected should be forthwith ordained, as Anastasius relates : nevertheless some emperors still required to be consulted. Such was the veneration of this good prince for the holy pope Benedict, that he sent to him a lock of the hair of his two sons Justinian and Heraclius, as a token of their adoption by him, according to the custom of those times. This religious emperor overcame the Saracens in a war of seven years continuance both by sea and land ; he recovered from them several provinces, and obliged them to pay him an annual tribute. He died in peace in 685: Pope Benedict laboured much for the conversion of heretics, and in repairing and adorning churches. He did not complete eleven months in the pontificate ; but filled this short term with good works. He died on the seventh of May, 686, and was buried in St Peter's church. See his letter, and Anastasius Biblioth. T. 6. Concil.

St JOHN of Beverley, B. C. This illustrious saint was born at Harpham, a village in the province of the Deiri, which comprised Yorkshire, Lancashire and the rest of the kingdom of the Northumbers on the South side of the Tyne ; what lay beyond it being called Bernicia. An earnest desire of qualifying himself for the service of God drew him young into Kent, where he made great progress in learning and piety in the famous school of St Theodorus the archbishop, under the direction of the holy abbot Adrian. (1) Afterwards returning into his own country, he pursued the exercises of piety in the monastery of men under St Hilda at Whitby ; till, in the beginning of the reign of king Alfred, upon the death of Eata, he was made bishop of Hagulstad or Hexam. What time he had to spare from his functions he consecrated to heavenly contemplation ; retiring for that purpose into the church-yard of St Michael's beyond the river Tyne, about a mile and half from Hagulstad, especially during the forty days of Lent. He was accustomed to take with him some poor person whom he served during that time. Once in the beginning of a

(1) Bede, l. 5. c. 2. 6. See Britannia Sancta.

Lent he took with him a dumb youth, who never had been able to utter one word, and whose head was covered with hideous scabs and scales without any hair. The saint caused a mansion to be built for this sick youth within his inclosure, and often admitted him into his own cell. On the second Sunday he made the sign of the cross upon his tongue, and loosed it. Then he taught him to say Gea, which signifies in Saxon Yea or Yes; then the letters of the alphabet A, B, C, and afterwards syllables and words. Thus the youth miraculously obtained his speech. Moreover, by the saint's blessing the remedies prescribed by a physician whom he employed, his head was entirely healed, and became covered with hair. When St Wilfrid returned from banishment St John yielded up to him the see of Hagulstad: but some time after, upon the death of Bosa, a man of great sanctity and humility, as Bede testifies, he was placed in the archiepiscopal chair of York. Venerable Bede, who received the holy orders of deacon and priest from his hands, gives ample testimony to his sanctity; and relates the instantaneous cure of the sick wife of a neighbouring Thane or lord by holy water, and several other miracles performed by him, from the testimony of Bercthun, abbot of Beverley. and Herebald, abbot of Tinmouth, who had been eye-witnesses to several of them. St John made frequent retirement his delight, to renew thereby his spirit of devotion, lest the dissipation of exterior employments should extinguish it. He chose for his retreat a monastery which he had built at Beverley, then a forest, now a market-town, twenty-seven miles from York. This monastery, according to the custom of those times he erected for the use of both sexes, and put it under the government of his disciple Bercthun or Brithun, first abbot of Beverley, then called Endierwood or wood of the Deiri. In 717, being much broken with age and fatigues, he resigned his bishopric to his chaplain St Wilfrid the Younger, and having ordained him bishop of York, he retired to Beverley, where he spent the remaining four years of his life in the punctual performance of all monastic duties. He died there the death of the just on the 7th of May, 721. His successor governed the see of York fifteen years, was a great lover of the beauty of God's house, and is named among the saints, April 29. The monastery of Beverley having been destroyed by the Danes; king Athelstan, who had obtained a great victory over the Scots by the intercession of St John, founded in his honour, in the same place, a rich collegiate church of canons. King Henry V. attributed to the intercession of this saint the glorious victory of Agincourt, on which occasion a synod, in 1416, ordered his festival to be solemnly kept over all England. (2) Henschenius the Bollandist, in the second tome of May, has published four books of the miracles wrought at the relicks of St John of Beverley, written by eye-witnesses. (3) His sacred bones were honourably translated into the church by Alfric, archbishop of York, in 1037: a feast in honour of which translation was kept at York on the 25th of October. On the 13th of September (not the 24th, as Mr Stevens says) in 1664, the sexton digging a grave in the church of Beverley, discovered a vault of freestone, in which was a box of lead, containing several pieces of bones, with some dust, yielding a sweet smell; with inscriptions, by which it appeared that these were the mortal remains of St John of Beverley, as we read in Dugdale's history of the collegiate church of Beverley, who has transcribed them, p. 57. These relicks had been hid in the beginning of the reign of king Edward VI. Dugdale and Stevens testify, that they were all reinterred in the middle-alley of the same church. Alcuin (a) had an extraordinary devotion to

(2) See Lynwoode, Provinciale 104 (3) p. 173.

(a) ALCUIN, or Alcuine, that is, All-win, (the same name in the original Saxon as Victor and Vincentius in Latin; Nicetas and Nicephorus in Geek) was a native of York, as he himself declares in his pœm on the saints of that diocese. Foreigners not being accustomed to pronounce the W, he omitted it in his name; which he mollified into Albinus, prefixing to it in France the name of Flaccus. In his letters he often styles himself Flaccus Albinus, never Albinus Flaccus, as many moderns falsely call him. Alcuin was nobly born, became

St John of Beverley, and in his poem on the saints of York, published by Thomas Gale, gives a long history of the miracles wrought by him from verse 1085;

a monk at York, and was made deacon of that church. He learned Latin, Greek, and the elements of the Hebrew language, and went through the sacred studies under Egbert and Elbert, who taught a great school in that city, till they were successively placed in the archiepiscopal chair. When Elbert succeeded Egbert in that dignity, in 766, he committed to Alcuin the care of the school and of the great library belonging to that church. Eanbald succeeding his uncle Elbert, sent Alcuin to Rome, to bring over his pall in 780. Charlemagne king of France, afterwards emperor, meeting him at Parma, earnestly desired to detain him; but the canons obliged him to return to his own church. However, that prince prevailed with the king of Northumberland and the archbishop of York to send him back into France. He appointed him to open a great school in his own palace, and generally assisted in person at his lessons with the princes his sons and other lords. He also, by his advice, instituted an academy in his palace, consisting of many learned men, who met on certain days to discourse on points of sacred learning. In this academy Alcuin took the name of Flaccus from Horace, the king, that of David, Adelaar of Corbie, that of Augustine, &c. The king sent Alcuin his ambassador to king Offa, in 790, to adjust certain differences; he honoured him exceedingly, and usually called him his master: by his advice he made several literary establishments, and consulted him in affairs of state. The ingenious Gaillard (Hist. de la Rivalité de France & l'Angles. T. 1. p. 73.) says: The wise Alcuin disgusted Charlemagne from the passion for conquests by discovering to him a new source of true greatness, far dearer to humanity. That prince, instructed by such a master, learned to set a just value on true knowledge: he placed his glory in protecting science, in perfecting the administration, and in extending in every respect the empire of reason. This it is that has principally rendered the name of that great prince immortal in the eyes of true judges. This great man assisted at the council of Franckfort in 794, and at that of Aix-la-Chapelle in 799, in which latter he confuted Felix of Urgel, who was present. Felix and Elipandus, another Spanish bishop, revived the Demi-Nestorian error, maintaining that Christ as man was only the adoptive, not the natural, Son of God. Whence it would follow that he assumed not only the human nature, but also a human person: which was the heresy of Nestorius. Elipandus reproached Alcuin for his riches, and the number of his vassals. Alcuin discovers his disinterestedness and spirit of poverty in several letters, as in that to the priest Eata, and in others. Writing to the bishop of Lyons he justifies himself, saying: "Elipandus objects to me my riches, servants and vassals, which amount to the number of 20,000, not reflecting that the possession of riches is vicious only from the attachment of the heart. It is one thing to possess the world, and another to be possessed by the world. Some possess riches, though perfectly disengaged from them in their hearts:

to 1215. Rabanus Maurus has placed Alcuin in his martyrology on the 19th of May, and Henschenius on that day gives his life, and mentions several private martyrologies in which his name is found, though he has never been any where honoured in the office of the church. (4) On St John of Beverley, see Bede, hearts: others though they enjoy none, yet love and covet them." These vassals belonged to the several abbeys of which the king compelled him to undertake the administration; purely that he might establish in them regular discipline, and employ the surplus of the revenues in alms, according to the intentions of such foundations, as Lupus abbot of Ferriers (ep. 11.) and the anonymous life of St Aldericus, archbishop of Sens, assure us: for the king had made him his general almoner to relieve the distressed, and appointed him a house for the reception of strangers. How tedious the hurry of a court is to a lover of learning or solitude, any one may judge, who has read the genuine description of a court life, in the time of our king Henry II. in Peter of Blois, or John of Salisbury. Alcuin never ceased to complain of its yoke and the dissipation attending it, and to solicit the king for leave to retire into some monastery, till at length he obtained his request. He petitioned to go to that of Fulda, but the king would by no means consent that he should withdraw to so great a distance from court: at length he suffered him to retire to that of St Martin's at Tours, of which he had nominated him abbot in 796. He was still obliged often to wait on the king; and settled the reformation of St Benedict of Anian in the houses which were subject to him. He had long alledged his age and feebleness, that he might be permitted to resign the government of the several great abbeys which had been committed to his care. At length his tears and intreaties prevailed, and according to his earnest desire he was reduced to the condition of a private monk, (others say regular Canon, for he had secularized St Martin's abbey at Tours, and established canons in it) some time before his happy death, which happened at Tours, on the 19th of May, 804, on Whitsunday, as he had begged of God. See his life in Mabillon, Act. Bened. T. 4. p. 146. also in his annals of that Order b. 25. 27. Ceillier. T. 18. p. 278. Biogr. Britan. &c.

(4) Henschenius, T. 4. Maij. p. 334.

The best edition of the works of Alcuin was given us by the learned Andrew Duchesne, in three tomes, in 1617. His comments on the scripture consist in extracts from the ancient fathers. He has left us the lives of St Vedast, St Martin, St Riquier, and St Willibrord. His letters, of which we have 115 published by Duchesne, 67 by Canisius, several others by Usher, Baluze and Mabillon, are curious, and are addressed to several kings, queens, prelates and other great men. His moral works breathe a sincere piety: the dogmatic are solid and close. His doctrine in all points of faith is most pure, and he lets slip no opportunity of exerting his zeal in its defence. We are promised a new, complete and accurate edition of the works of this great man, by a monk of the congregation of St. Vanne.

Hist. l. 5. c. 2. &c. his life compiled by Folcard, monk of Canterbury, published by Henschenius with other monuments, T. 2. Maij. p. 168. F. Edw. Maihew, &c.

M A Y VIII.

THE APPARITION OF ST MICHAEL THE ARCHANGEL.

ALMIGHTY God displayeth the riches of his goodness, power and glory in the production of his creatures; and in them he manifesteth his own perfections. The whole world is as it were one great temple, where the divine presence shines, as it did in the Jewish at the time of its dedication, in a visible glory. We owe to him a tribute of praise and thanksgiving for all his works, but more particularly for the noble and pure intelligences, on whom he has stamped his own spiritual image in a more perfect manner. He hath enriched them with the treasures of his grace, and of spotless sanctity, and hath made them the immortal and blessed inhabitants of his heavenly kingdom. They are by the perfection of their nature superior to man (1), who seems to hold the lowest rank in the scale of rational beings, and to be the link between the spiritual and the material world; he being by his body allied to matter, and by his soul to the celestial intelligences. He is therefore in natural perfections essentially inferior and subordinate to those pure spirits; nevertheless, in grace he may surpass them; and the church assures us that the Blessed Virgin transcends their highest Orders. Upon their creation God placed them in a state of meriting; and, whilst Lucifer and his adherents fell by pride, and were changed into devils, the good spirits persevering in justice, were confirmed in grace, and crowned with glory.

It is manifest, from the holy scriptures, that God is pleased to make frequent use of the ministry of the heavenly spirits in the dispensation of his providence in this world, and especially towards man. Hence the name of Angel (which is not properly a denomination of nature, but office) has been appropriated to them, especially to a certain Order among them. The fathers from the sacred oracles distinguish nine Orders of these holy spirits, namely, the Seraphims, Cherubims and Thrones; Dominations, Principalities and Powers; Virtues, Archangels and Angels (2). Though many think that the apostle hath not enumerated all the ranks of those noble beings (3). St Gregory the Great (4) and the ancient author of the book On the Celestial Hierarchy, commonly ascribed to St Dionysius the Areopagite, divide these nine Orders into three hierarchies, and each of these again into three ranks. Each Order among them hath its characteristic perfections and functions, by which the spirits, which compose it, in a particular manner set forth and glorify some attribute of the Deity: one his supreme dominion and power, another his strength; the Cherubims his omniscience or boundless knowledge, the Seraphims his infinite love. Archangels are those spirits whom God makes his ambassadors in the execution of his greatest designs. The angels he employs in his ordinary dispensations to men. Their numbers are exceeding great, they being represented in scripture by thousands of thousands, and ten thousand times ten thousand: and it is written in the book of Job: Is there any numbering of his soldiers? (5) These numberless armies of glorious spirits are the bright ornament of the heavenly Jerusalem. They are called by St Clemens of Alexandria (6), The first begotten of God. And by St Sophronius (7), The living images and representatives of God. As a skilful architect he polishes more those stones which he destines to a more noble rank, and to more excellent purposes.

(1) Hebr. ii. 7. Ps. viii. 6.

(2) Epes. i. 21. Col. i. 16. (3) St Hier. in Epes. i. St Chrysostom, Hom. 3. in Epes. & Hom. 4. de Incompreh. &c. (4) Hom. 34. in Evang. (5) Job xxv. 3. (6) Strom. l. 6. (7) Or. de Angel. excel.

The angels are all pure spirits (8), that is, they are uncompounded immaterial substances, or subsisting simple beings which have no parts, as bodies and matter have. In them nothing is to be found of colour, shape, extension or any other qualities of matter. They are, by a property of their nature, immortal, as every spirit is. For a simple entity, or what has no parts, can only perish by annihilation, which is a supernatural act of divine omnipotence, no less than creation. On the contrary, a body being compounded of parts, is naturally mortal; being obnoxious to continual vicissitudes, and liable to perish by a separation or dissolution of its parts. Hence the bodies of the elect, after the general resurrection, will be immortal only by a gift of grace. As in their nature, so in its properties and appendices, do the angels surpass inferior creatures. Their subtilty, quickness of penetration, extensive knowledge and science in natural things, are undoubtedly perfect in proportion to the excellency of their beings, in as much as they are pure intelligences. It is no less certain that they enjoy the faculty of communicating to each other their thoughts and conceptions, which St Paul calls the tongues of angels. Their discourse can only be intellectual, as Theodoret observes (9), but must on that account be the more perfect. The prophets frequently express it as a peculiar and distinguishing property of God alone, that he is the searcher of hearts; so that his all-seeing eye always penetrates into their most hidden recesses, and no creature can conceal any thing from Him, before whom all things are light. In what manner the angels communicate their thoughts or understand those of others, we are not able clearly to determine. St Thomas and divines usually teach, with St Gregory (10), that God speaks to his angels by interiorly discovering to them his will, and by inspiring them with a sweet inclination to execute all his orders; and that these pure spirits speak to one another by the interior desire or will of communicating their thoughts ty, and incomprehensible perfections, drink plentifully of the fountain of his holy joy and love; pouring forth with all their strength, without intermission to eternity, a perfect spiritual homage, of profound adoration and praise, to the glory of his holy name. Though in this imperfect state of human nature, we can have but very weak notions of the transcendent powers and faculties of superior spiritual beings, revelation has in part supplied the defect, and drawn aside the veil, letting us into some knowledge of this immaterial world of spirits. The holy scripture accordingly admonishes us to watch and stand upon our guard against the malice and snares of the wicked apostate spirits, who, by their evil suggestions endeavour to seduce and draw us into sin. It also assures us, that the good angels are often employed by God in ministering to us, and that they frequently lend us their friendly succours. It farther informs us, that when the material curtain of our body, which at present hides from our eyes the invisible spiritual world, shall be rent asunder, immediately a sudden torrent of light will break in upon us, and we shall see ourselves in the midst of those bright legions. The wicked indeed shall find themselves in darkness, under the arrest and tyranny of the accursed spirits, which were here their tempters, and will be hereafter their tormentors, and their companions in unquenchable flames. But a guard of holy angels will conduct the soul of every just man, like Lazarus, to the abodes of light, and it shall be associated to the millions of millions of happy spirits, being itself a kindred spirit.

(8) Ps. ciii. 4. Hebr. i. 14. Ephes. vi. 12. Vide Patres apud Petav. l. de Angelis. S. Ignat. ep. ad Trallian. &c. (9) Theodoret in 1 Cor. xiii. 1. (10) Moral. l. 2. c. 15.

Among the holy archangels, three are particularly distinguished in holy writ: SS. Michael, Gabriel and Raphael. (a) St Michael, whom the church honours

(a) Gabriel, which in Hebrew signifies the strength of God, was his ambassador in the greatest of all mysteries, the Incarnation of his Son. He was also the messenger of God to deliver his most solemn promise of the same mystery to the prophet Daniel. Raphael signifies the healing of God. This archangel conducted young Toby to Rages, cured his father's blindness, chased away the devil Asmodeus, and bound him; that is, took away his power of hurting: for this, as St. Austin observes. (S. Aug. l. 10. de civ. c. 7. 8.) is what in the scriptures is called binding wicked spirits. (Mat. xii. 29. Mark iii. 27. 2 Pet. ii. 4. Apoc. xx, 2.)

this day, was the prince of the faithful angels who opposed Lucifer and his associates in their revolt against God. Michael in Hebrew signifies, Who is like God? This was as it were his motto, when by humility he repressed the pride of that apostate angel (13), and set up the standard against him. He continues to protect the saints from his assaults. When the body of Moses was ordered to be secretly buried, lest it should prove an occasion of idolatry or superstition to Jews, who had been accustomed to see the superstitious practices of the Egyptians towards their dead princes and friends, the devil attempted to prevent the execution of the divine order, that he might insult the body, or make it an object of the people's sin. But St Michael checked his insolence, not commanding him in his own name, but with humility intimating to him the command of God to desist (14.) As the devil is the sworn enemy of God's holy church, St Michael is its special protector against his assaults and stratagems: in this quality he was the defender of the Jewish synagogue, as is gathered from Daniel (15), and Zachary (16); and it appears, from the most ancient books of the Rabbins, that he was always acknowledged such by the Hebrews; who even think he was the angel that conducted them into the promised land, and was the instrument or minister of God in giving them the law, and in other signal favours. This holy archangel has ever been honoured in the Christian church, under the same title as her guardian under God, and as the protector of the faithful; for God is pleased to employ the zeal and charity of the good angels and their leader against the malice of the devil. To thank his adorable goodness for this benefit of his merciful providence, is this festival instituted by the church in honour of the good angels: in which devotion she has been encouraged by several apparitions of this glorious archangel. Among others it is recorded, that St Michael, in a vision, admonished the bishop of Siponto to build a church in his honour on Mount Gargano, now called Monte-de-Sant-Angelo, (13) Apoc. xii. 7. (14) Jud. 9. (15) Ch. xii. (16) Ch. i.

in the Capitanate, near Manfredonia, in the kingdom of Naples. This history is confirmed by Sigebert in his chronicle, and by the ancient tradition of the churches of that country (b), and is approved authentic by the judicious critic, Mabillon, who visited those places, and examined the records and monuments (17). This church was erected in the fifth century, and is a place of great devotion. When the emperor Otho III. had, contrary to his word, put to death for rebellion Crescentius, a Roman senator; being touched with remorse, he cast himself at the feet of St Romuald, who in satisfaction for his crime, enjoined him to walk bare-foot, on a penitential pilgrimage, to St Michael's on Mount Gargano: which penance he performed in 1002, as St Peter Damian relates. In France Aubert, bishop of Avranches, moved, it is said, by certain visions, built, in 708, a church in honour of St Michael, on a barren rock which hangs over the sea between Normandy and Britany. In the tenth age this collégiate church was changed into a great Benedictin abbey. In imitation of this was the famous church of St Michael refounded in Cornwall, in the reign of William the conqueror, by William earl of Moreton, on a mountain which the tide encompasses. It is said by Borlace, the learned and accurate Antiquarian of Cornwall, that this church of St Michael was first built in the fifth century. The Greeks mention in their Menæa a famous apparition of St Michael at Chone, the ancient Colossæ in Phrygia. Many apparitions of good angels in favour of men are recorded both in the Old and New Testament. It is mentioned in particular of this

(17) Acta Sanct. Ord. S. Bened. sæc. 3. par. 1. p. 85, not. 4.

(b) Baronius shews many circumstances of this vision, related by some moderns to be apocryphal. On this and other apparitions of St Michael, see Charles Stengelius, the German monk's treatise printed in 1629, under the following title: S. Michaelis principatus, apparitiones, templa, cultus, & miracula, ex sacris litteris, SS. PP. et historiis ecclesiasticis eruta. Or rather, Selecta quædam de S. Michaelæ Archangelo, ejus apparitionibus, festis et cultu, imprimis in monte Gargano, illucque factis peregrinationibus, a D. Francisco Dominico Hæberlin, Academiæ Juliæ Carolinæ vicerectore. Helmstadii. An. 1739, in 8vo special guardian and protector of the church, that in the persecution of Antichrist he will powerfully stand up in her defence: At that time shall Michael rise up, the great prince, who standeth for the children of thy people. (18.) He is not only the protector of the church, but of every faithful soul. He defeated the devil by humility; we are enlisted in the same warfare. His arms were humility and ardent love of God; the same must be our weapons. We ought to regard this archangel as our leader under God: and, courageously resisting the devil in all his assaults, to cry out: Who can be compared to God? On the good angels see more, September 29, and October 2.

ON THE SAME DAY.

St PETER, Archbishop of Tarentaise, now called Monstiers, in Savoy. He was a native of Dauphine. A strong inclination to learning, assisted by a good genius and a happy memory, carried him very successfully through his studies. At twenty years of age he took the Cistercian habit at Bonnevaux, a monastery that had been lately filled by a colony sent by St Bernard from Clairvaux. They employed a great part of the day in hewing wood, and tilling the ground in the forest, in perpetual silence and interior prayer. They eat but once a day, and their fare was herbs or roots, mostly turnips of a coarse sort. Four hours in the twenty-four was the usual allowance for sleep; so that, rising at midnight, they continued in the church till it was morning, and returned no more to rest: which was the primitive custom of that Order. Peter practised the greatest austerities with fervour and alacrity: he was most exactly obedient, obliging to all, humble and modest. His pious parents, after the birth of four children, lived in perpetual continency, and in the practice of rigorous abstinence, prayed much, and gave large alms: their house they seemed to turn into an hospital, so great was the number of poor and strangers they constantly entertained, whom they furnished with good beds whilst they themselves often lay on straw. The father and his two other sons at length followed Peter to Bonnevaux, and the mother and daughter embraced the same Order in a neighbouring nunnery. The year after Peter had taken the monastic habit, his example was followed by Amedeus, nearly related to the emperor Conrad III. and sixteen other persons of worth and distinction. Amedeus indeed having there made his solemn profession with the rest, by the advice of persons of great virtue and discretion, spent some time at Cluni, the better to superintend his son's education in the school established there for the education of youth: but he returned after some time to Bonnevaux; and made it his request at his re-admission that he might be enjoined the lowest offices in the house. To this the abbot, for his greater advancement in humility and penance, consented. The earl of Albion his uncle, coming one day to see him, found him in a sweat, cleaning the monks dirty shoes, and at the same time, so attentive to his prayers, as not to perceive him. The earl, remembering in what state he had seen him in the world, was so struck and so much edified at this spectacle, that he ever after retained the deep impression which it made on his mind, and published it at court. Amedeus built four monasteries of his Order; among which was that of Tamies, or Stomedium, in the desert mountains of the diocese of Tarentaise, of which he procured his intimate friend St Peter, not then quite thirty years of age, to be appointed the first abbot, in 1128. Amedeus worked himself with his spade and mattock in building some of these monasteries, and died at Bonnevaux, in the odour of sanctity, in 1140. His son Amedeus, for whose education in piety he had always the greatest concern, after having spent part of his youth in the court of his kinsman the emperor, became a Cistercian monk under St Bernard at Clairvaux, and died bishop of Lausanne.

(18) Dan. xii. 1.

The monastery of Tamies seemed a house of terrestrial angels; so constantly were its inhabitants occupied in the employment of angels, paying to God an uninterrupted homage of praise, adoration and love. St Peter, by the help of Amedeus III. count of Savoy, founded in it an hospital to receive all the poor sick persons of the country, and all strangers; and would be himself its servant to attend them. In 1142, the count of Savoy procured his election to the archbishopric of Tarentaise, and he was compelled by St Bernard and the general chapter of his Order, though much against his own inclinations, to accept of that charge. Indeed that diocese stood extremely in need of such an apostolic pastor, having been usurped by a powerful ambitious wolf, named Idrael, whose deposition left it in the most desolate condition. The parish-churches and tithes were sacrilegiously held by laymen; and the clergy, who ought to have stemmed the torrent of iniquity, contributed but too often to promote irregularity by their own wicked example. The sight of these evils drew tears from the eyes of the saint, with which he night and day implored the divine mercy upon the souls entrusted to his care. He directed all his fasts, his prayers and labours, for the good of his flock: being persuaded that the sanctification of the people committed to his charge, was an essential condition for securing his own salvation. He altered nothing in the simplicity of a monastic life, and looked on the episcopal character as a laborious employment rather than a dignity. His clothes were plain, and his food coarse; for he eat nothing but brown bread, herbs and pulse, of which the poor had always their share. He made the constant visitation of his diocese his employ; he every where exhorted and instructed his whole charge with unwearied zeal and invincible patience, and besides he provided the several parishes of his diocese with able and virtuous pastors. When he came to his bishopric, he found the chapter of his cathedral full of irregularities, and the service of God performed in a very careless manner; but he soon made that church a pattern of good order and devotion. He recovered the tithes and other revenues of the church, that had been usurped by certain powerful laymen; made many excellent foundations for the education of youth, and the relief of the poor; repaired several churches, and restored every where devotion and the decent service of God. The author of his life, who was the constant companion of his labours, and the witness of the greatest part of his actions after he was made bishop, assures us he wrought many miracles in several places, chiefly in curing the sick, and multiplying provisions for the poor in times of great distress; so that he was regarded as a new Thaumaturgus. The confusion his humility suffered from the honours he received, joined to his love of solitude, made him resolve to retire from the world; and accordingly in 1155, after he had borne the weight of the episcopal character thirteen years, having settled his diocese in good order, he disappeared on a sudden; and made his way to a retired monastery of Cistercians in Germany, where he was not known. In the mean time his family and diocese mourned for the loss of their tender father. Strict enquiry was made in all the neighbouring provinces, especially in the monasteries, but in vain; till after some time divine providence discovered him by the following accident. A young man, who had been brought up under his care, came to the monastery in which he lay concealed, and upon observing the monks as they were going out of the church to their work, he knew his bishop, and made him known to the whole community. The religious no sooner understood who he was, but they all fell at his feet, begged his blessing, and expressed much concern for not having known him before. The saint was inconsolable at being discovered, and was meditating a new escape, but he was so carefully watched, that it was not in his power; so that he was forced to go back to his diocese, where he was received with the greatest demonstrations of joy. He applied himself to his functions with greater vigour than ever. The poor were always the object of his peculiar care. He was twice discovered to have given away, with the hazard of his own life, in extreme cold weather in winter, the waistcoat which he had on his back. For three months before the harvest he distributed general alms among all the inhabitants of the mountains, provisions being always very scarce there at that season. He founded hospitals on the Alps for the entertainment of poor travellers; because, before that time, many perished for want of such a succour. To preserve in his heart a spirit of devotion and penance, he continued to practise as much as possible, all the austerities and other rules of his Order, only commuting manual labour for the spiritual functions of his charge. By his conversation with the God of peace, he imbibed an eminent spirit of that virtue, and learned by humility and charity to be truly the man of peace; having also a singular talent for extinguishing the most implacable and inveterate enmities. He often reconciled sovereign princes, when they were at variance, and prevented several bloody wars. The emperor Frederic I. set up Octavian, a schismatical pope under the name of Victor against Alexander III. St Peter was almost the only subject of the empire who had the courage openly to oppose his unjust attempt, and he boldly defended the cause of justice in presence of the tyrant, and in many councils. The emperor, who banished others that spoke in favour of that cause, stood in awe of his sanctity: and Peter by his mild counsels frequently softened his fierceness, and checked the boisterous sallies of his fury, whilst like a roaring lion he spread terror on every side. The saint preached in Alsace, Burgundy, Lorrain, and in many parts of Italy; and confounded the obstinate by numberless miraculous cures of the sick, performed by the imposition of his hands and prayer. He was ordered by the pope to go into France and Normandy, to endeavour a reconciliation between the kings of England and France, who had made peace in 1169, but quarrelled again the next year: Though then very old, he preached wherever he went. Lewis VII. sent certain gentlemen of his court to meet him at a great distance, and received him with the greatest marks of honour and respect; but honours and crowds were of all things the most troublesome to the saint. The man of God restored the use of sight to one blind in the presence of the count of Flanders, and many other noblemen, who were at that time with the king of France; who being also himself an eye-witness, examined carefully all the circumstances, and declared the miracle to be evident and incontestable. The saint went from Paris to Chaumont, on the confines of Normandy, where Henry II. king of England met him; and, when he arrived in sight of the holy man, alighted from his horse, and coming up fell at his feet. The people stole the cloak or hood of St Peter, and were going to cut it in pieces to divide the scraps, being persuaded that they would perform miracles. But the king took the whole cloak for himself, saying: "I have myself seen miraculous cures performed by his girdle, which I already possess." In his presence the saint restored the use of speech to a girl that was dumb. On Ash-wednesday in 1171, St Peter being at the Cistercian abbey of Mortemer in the diocese of Rouën, the king of England came thither with his whole court, and received ashes from his hands. The archbishop prevailed on the two kings to put an end to their differences by a treaty of peace, and to procure councils to be assembled in their dominions in which Alexander's title should be solemnly recognized. The holy man hereupon returned to his church, but was some time after sent again by the pope to the king of England to endeavour to compose the difference between him and his son: but his journey had not the desired effect. He fell sick on his return, and died the death of the just at Bellevaux, a monastery of his Order, in the diocese of Besançon, in 1174, being seventy-three years old. He was canonized by pope Celestine III. in 1191. See his life written nine years after his death by Geoffrey, some time his companion, and afterwards abbot of Hautecombe, by the order of pope Lucius III. See also Le Nain, T. 2. p. 83.

St VICTOR, an illustrious Martyr at Milan. St Ambrose speaks of him, (1) and St Gregory of Tours (2) mentions his tomb famed for miracles. He served in the armies of Maximian, and by his order was tortured on the rack, and at length beheaded at Milan, in 303. His celebrated church at Milan is now in the hands of the Olivetan monks, by whom it was rebuilt in a most sumptuous manner and in a finished taste, when St Charles performed the dedication of it, and the solemn translation of the martyr's relicks. See the Bollandists.

(1) L. 7. in Luc.

(2) L. 1. de glor. Mart. c. 45

St WIRO, in Irish Bearaidhe, a holy Irish bishop, who travelled to Rome with St Plechelm, and the deacon Otger. He afterwards preached the faith of Christ to the pagans in the Low-Countries. Prince Pepin of Herstal was a great admirer of his sanctity, and bestowed on him a lonely wood called the Mount of St Peter, now of St Odilia, near the river Roer, one league from Ruremund; and repaired to him often barefoot to confess his sins. Broken by austerities and old age, he departed to our Lord in the seventh century. According to the annals of the Four Masters, he was abbot, or bishop, of Dublin before he went on the mission of the Low-countries, and died in 650. See Ware's bishops Colgan, Trias Thaum. p. 112. n. 69; Miræus, and his ancient life in the Bollandists, with an hymn, and several other memoirs, T. 2. Maij. p. 309.

St ODRIAN, Bishop and tutelar saint of Waterford. Colgan was not able to discover even the time when he lived. This rich and famous city was subject to the bishop of Lisimore (which see was founded by St Carthag in 631) till the Ostmen being settled here, they procured a bishop for Waterford. Malchus, a monk of Winchester, was consecrated first bishop of Waterford by St Anselm at Canterbury in 1096. For the sees of Dublin, Limerick and Waterford were subjected to the metropolitan of Canterbury during the eleventh and twelfth centuries, whilst the Ostmen were masters in those cities. The sees of Waterford and Lisimore have been united since the year 1363. See Ware's Irish Bishops, p. 533.

St GYBRIAN or GOBRIAN, Priest. He left Ireland in quest of a retreat, and led many years a penitential contemplative life in a poor cell which he built near the river Marne, in the territory of Challons, where he assembled a small community of fervent servants of God, and another at some distance of holy virgins. He died very old in the eighth century.

Many miraculous cures of sick persons at his tomb and by his intercession gave occasion to a chapel being built over his tomb. By an order of Fulk, archbishop of Rheims, his body was translated thither about the year 890. It is deposited there in the great church of the abbey of St Remigius. See Molanus, Saussaye, and Colgan, in MSS, act 8. Maii.

MAY IX.

ST GREGORY NAZIANZEN, DOCTOR OF THE CHURCH, B. C.

From his own works, and other monuments of that age. See Gregory of Cæsarea, who writ his life in 940. Hermant, Tillemont, T. 9. Ceillier, T. 7. also the life of this saint compiled from his works by Baronius, published by Alberici, in an appendix to the life and letters of that cardinal in 759. T. 2.

A. D. 389.

ST GREGORY, who from his profound skill in sacred learning is surnamed the Theologian, was a native of Arianzum, an obscure village in the territory of Nazianzum, a small town in Cappadocia, not far from Cæsarea. His parents are both honoured in the calendars of the church: his father on the 1st of January, and his mother Nonna on the 5th of August. She drew down the blessing of heaven upon her family by most bountiful and continual alms-deeds, in which she knew one of the greatest advantages of riches to consist: yet, to satisfy the obligation of justice which she owed to her children, she, by her prudent economy, improved at the same time their patrimony. The greatest part of her time she devoted to holy prayer; and her respect and attention to the least thing which regarded religion is not to be expressed. His father, whose name also was Gregory, was from his infancy a worshipper of false gods, but of the sect called the Hipsistarii, on account of the profession they made of adoring the most high God; though at the same time they worshipped fire with the Persians, and observed the Jewish sabbath and distinction of meats. We find no mention of them but in the writings of our saint. The prayers and tears of Nonna at length obtained of God the conversion of her husband, whose integrity in the discharge of the chief magistracy of his town, and the practice of strict moral virtue, prepared him for such a change. He was baptized at Nazianzum about the time of the great council of Nice, having first most carefully prepared himself to receive that holy sacrament in the most fervent dispositions of piety, and to preserve the precious graces which attend it. Not very long after, the sanctity of his life raised him to the episcopal see of Nazianzum, which he held about forty-five years, dying in 374, when he was above ninety years old. (a)

(a) Our saint's father having been baptized about the time of the council of Nice in 325, and made bishop four years after, some critics have thought his father was bishop when he was born: and it is possible that in a great scarcity of pastors the law of celibacy might have been legally dispensed with by the bishops on some very extraordinary emergencies: but this was not here the case. The age of our saint, and many circumstances in his life and writings, shew clearly that he was born long before his father's episcopacy, as is demonstrated by Stiling from the very age of his father and mother, &c. The same is proved by Baronius, both in his annals and in his life of St Gregory Nazianzen published by Alberici at the end of the cardinal's life and letters, at Rome, an. 175. T. 2. The verses, upon which the contrary opinion is grounded, are so ambiguous, that certainly no argument can be drawn from them. In these the father is introduced saying to him: "You have not yet lived so many years as I have spent in sacrifices."

Ὅσκι τοσῶτον ἐκμετρηκας βιον,
Ὅσος διήλθε θυσιῶν ἐμοὶ χρόνος.

Where θυσιῶν may more properly be understood of the heathenish sacrifices, than of the Christian, which the father had served more years than the son had lived at that time, or than he himself had administered the Christian priesthood. The word ἐκμετρηκας is also ambiguous, and translated by E. Stiling, "You have not considered," viz. my great age, "to respect it, and readily obey me in assisting me to govern my diocese, which you decline." Baronius appeals to these very verses to prove that the saint was born before his father was baptized. See Stiling (Diss. de ætat. S. Greg. Naz. ante Tom 3. Sept.) who proves that our saint was born between the years 312 and 318, and before the conversion of his father: and he confirms this by many other proofs, even by the formal testimony of our holy Doctor himself, Or. 19. Dom Prudentius Marand, who has prepared a new accurate edition of the works of St Gregory Naz. almost ready for the press, complains that we have very few MSS. copies of his poems and letters, and these often faulty, and pretends the first word of these

His son has left us the most edifying detail of his humility, holy zeal, and other virtues (1). He had three children, Gorgonia, Gregory, and Cæsarius, who was the youngest. Gregory was the fruit of the most earnest prayers of his mother, who, upon his birth, offered him to God for the service of his church. His virtuous parents gave him the strongest impressions of piety in his tender age: and his chief study from his very infancy was to know God, by the help of pious books, in the reading whereof he was very assiduous. He relates, that in his youth he had a mysterious dream, in which he beheld himself caressed by chastity and temperance, under the appearance of two beautiful damsels, as their child; and they invited him to go with them, on the promise of raising him up to the light of the immortal Trinity, if he would put himself under their conduct. He says that from that time he resolved to serve God in a state of perfect continence. He writes in very strong terms of the strict obligation of vows of chastity, the violation of which he calls death, sacrilege and perfidy (2): he is also very large oftentimes upon the excellency and advantages of that holy state. (3)

Having acquired grammar-learning in the schools of his own country, and being formed to piety by domestic examples, he was sent to Cæsarea in Palestine, where the study of eloquence flourished. He pursued the same studies some time at Alexandria; and there embarked for Athens in November. The vessel was beaten by a furious storm during twenty days, without any hopes either for the ship or passengers; all which time he lay upon the deck, bemoaning the danger of his soul on account of his not having been as yet baptized; imploring the divine mercy with many two verses ought to be divided, and a Sigma read in the end, scarce, non fere. Our saint commends his father for having always rigorously observed the canons in every point, and in other places evidently asserts the precept of celibacy in the clergy. See Papebroke in append. Tom. 7. Maij. p. 656. where he confutes Tillemont, Hermant, &c. and fixes the birth both of St Basil and St Gregory Nazianzen between the years 308 and 318. Also Stilling, loc. cit. ut. sup.

(1) Naz. Or. 19. Carm. 2. (2) Carm. 2. (3) Carm. 18. 7. &c.

tears and loud groans, and frequently renewing his promise of devoting himself entirely to God, in case he survived the danger. God was pleased to hear his prayer : the tempest ceased, and the vessel arrived safe at Rhodes, and soon after at Ægina, an island near Athens. He had passed through Cæsarea of Cappadocia, in his road to Palestine : and making some stay there to improve himself under the great masters of that city, had contracted an acquaintance with the great St Basil, which he cultivated at Athens, whither that saint followed him soon after. The intimacy between these two saints became from that time the most perfect model of holy friendship, and nothing can be more tender, than the epitaph which St Gregory composed upon his friend. Whilst they pursued their studies together, they shunned the company of those scholars who sought too much after liberty ; and conversed only with the diligent and virtuous. They avoided all feasting and vain entertainments : and were acquainted only with two streets, one that led to the church, and the other to the schools. Riches they despised and accounted as thorns, employing their allowance in supplying themselves with bare necessaries for an abstemious and slender subsistence, and disposing of the remainder in behalf of the poor. Envy had no place in them ; sincere love made each of them esteem his companion's honour and advantage as his own : they were to each other a mutual spur to all good, and by a holy emulation neither of them would be outdone by the other in fasting, prayer, or the exercise of any virtue. St Basil left Athens first. The progress which St Gregory made here in eloquence, philosophy, and the sacred studies, appears by the high reputation which he acquired, and by the monuments which he has left behind him. But his greatest happiness and praise was that he always made the fear and love of God his principal affair, to which he referred his studies and all his endeavours. In 355, Julian, afterwards emperor, came to Athens, where he spent some months with St Basil and St Gregory, in the study of profane literature and the holy scriptures.

St Gregory then prognosticated what a mischief the empire was breeding up in that monster, from the levity of his carriage, the rolling and wandering of his eyes, the fierceness of his looks, the tossings of his head, the shrugging up of his shoulders, his uneven gait, his loud and unseasonable laughter, his rash and incoherent discourse; the indications of an unsettled and arrogant mind (4) The year following our saint left Athens for Nazianzum, and took Constantinople in his way. Here he found his brother Cæsarius, arrived not long before from Alexandria, where he had accomplished himself in all the polite learning of that age, and applied himself particularly to physic. The emperor Constantius honoured him with his favour, and made him his chief physician. His generosity appeared in this station by his practice of physic, even among the rich, without the inducement of either fee or reward. He was also a father to the poor, on whom he bestowed the greatest part of his income. Gregory was importuned by many to make his appearance at the bar, or at least to teach rhetoric, as that which would afford him the best means to display his talents, and raise his fortune in the world. But he answered that he had totally devoted himself to the service of God.

The first thing he did after his return to Nazianzum, was to fulfil his engagement of consecrating himself entirely to God, by receiving baptism at the hands of his father. This he did without reserve. "I have," says he, (5) "given all I have to him from whom I received it, and have taken him alone for my whole possession. I have consecrated to him my goods, my glory, my health, my tongue, and talents. All the fruit I have received from these advantages has been the happiness of despising them for Christ's sake." From that moment never was man more dead to ambition, riches, pleasures or reputation. He entertained no secret affection for the things of this world, but trampled under his feet all its pride and perishable goods; finding no ardour, no relish, no pleasure, but

(5) Or. 4. p. 121.

(5) Or. 1. p. 32.

in God and in heavenly things. His diet was coarse bread with salt and water. (6) He lay upon the ground, wore nothing but what was coarse and vile. He worked hard all day, spent a considerable part of the night in singing the praises of God, or in contemplation. (7) With riches he contemned also profane eloquence, on which he bestowed so much pains, making an entire sacrifice of it to Jesus Christ. His classics and books of profane oratory he abandoned to the worms and moths. (8) He regarded the greatest honours as vain dreams, which only deceive men, and dreaded the precipices down which ambition drags its inconsiderate slaves. Nothing appeared to him comparable to the life which a man leads who is dead to himself and his sensual inclinations; who lives as it were out of the world, and has no other conversation but with God. (9) However, he for some time took upon him the care of his father's household, and the management of his affairs. He was afflicted with several sharp fits of sickness, caused by his extreme austerities, and continual tears, which often did not suffer him to sleep. (10) He rejoiced in his distempers, because in them he found the best opportunities of mortification and self-denial. (11) The immoderate laughter, which his chearful disposition had made him subject to in his youth, was afterwards the subject of his tears. He obtained so compleat a conquest over the passion of anger, as to prevent all indeliberate motions of it, and became totally indifferent in regard to all that before was most dear to him. His generous liberality to the poor made him always as destitute of earthly goods as the poorest, and his estate was common to all who were in necessity, as a port is to all at sea. (12) Never does there seem to have been a greater lover of retirement and silence. He laments the excesses into which talkativeness draws men, and the miserable itch that prevails in most people to become teachers of others. (13)

It was his most earnest desire to disengage himself from the converse of men and the world, that he might

(6) Carm. 2. p. 31. (7) Carm. 55. (8) Carm. 1. ((9) Or. 29.
(10) Carm. 55. (11) Ep. 69. (12) Carm. 49. (13) Or. 9. 29.

more freely enjoy that of heaven. He accordingly, in 358. joined St Basil in the solitude into which he had retreated, situated near the river Iris in Pontus. Here watching, fasting, prayer, studying the holy scriptures, singing psalms and manual labour, employed their whole time. As to their exposition of the divine oracles, they were guided in this, not by their own lights and particular way of thinking, but, as Rufinus writes, (14) by the interpretation which the ancient fathers and doctors of the church had delivered concerning them. But this solitude Gregory enjoyed only just long enough to be enamoured of its sweetness, being soon recalled back by his father, then above eighty, to assist him in the government of his flock. To draw the greater succour from him he ordained him priest by force, and when he least expected it. This was performed in the church on some great festival, and probably on Christmas-day, in 361. He knew the sentiments of his son with regard to that charge, and invincible reluctance on several accounts, which was the reason of his taking this method. The saint accordingly speaks of his ordination, as a kind of tyranny which he knew not well how to digest; in which sentiments he fled into the deserts of Pontus, and sought relief in the company of his dear friend St Basil, by whom he had been lately importuned to return. Many censured this his flight, ascribing it to pride, obstinacy and the like motives. Gregory likewise himself, reflecting at leisure on his own conduct, and the punishment of the prophet Jonas for disobeying the command of God, came to a resolution to go back to Nazianzum; where, after a ten weeks absence, he appeared again on Easter-day, and there preached his first sermon on that great festival. This was soon after followed by another, which is extant under the title of his Apology for his flight. It is placed the first among his orations, on account of the importance of the subject. He treats in it principally on the great dignity, duties and dangers of the sacerdotal office; on the sanctity requisite to approach the altar and to appear before God, the author of purity : the extreme difficulty of governing the consciences of others, and applying remedies to the different maladies of souls. He insists much on the virtue and learning necessary for the sacred functions, to answer all the exigences of the faithful, and to confute errors. From these principles he concludes, that he had reason to tremble at the sight of such a burden, and to employ some time in preparing himself for the ministry of the altar by prayer, mortification and holy meditation. He adds, that, fearing the terrible account, which would be demanded of him for the souls committed to his care, should he refuse his labours, he like Jonas returned to the duties belonging to the station to which he was called, in hopes that obedience would support him in it, and be a means to procure him the graces necessary for this purpose.

(14) Rufin. hist. l. 2. c. 9. p. 254.

In this discourse St Gregory extols the unanimity of that church in faith and their mutual concord : but towards the end of the reign of Julian, an unfortunate division happened in it, which is mentioned by the saint in his first invective against that apostate prince. (15) The bishop, his father, hoping to gain certain persons to the church by condescension, admitted a certain writing which had been drawn up by secret favourers of Arianism in ambiguous and artful terms. This unwary condescension of the elder Gregory gave offence to the more zealous part of his flock, and especially to the monks, who refused thereupon to communicate with him. Our saint discharged his duty so well in this critical affair, that he united the flock with their pastor without the least concession in favour of the error of those by whom his father had been tricked into a subscription against his intention and design, his faith being entirely pure. On the occasion of this joyful re-union, our saint pronounced an elegant discourse. (16) Soon after the death of Julian he composed his two invective orations against that apostate. He imitates the severity which the prophets frequently made use of in their censures of wicked kings ; but his design was to defend the church against the pagans, by unmasking the injustice, impiety and hypocrisy, of its capital persecutor. The saint's younger brother Cæsarius had lived in the court of Julian, highly honoured by that emperor for his learning and skill in physic: St Gregory pressed him to forsake the family of an apostate prince, in which he could not live without being betrayed into many temptations and snares. (17) And so it happened: for Julian, after many caresses, assailed him by inveigling speeches, and at length by a warm disputation in favour of idolatry. Cæsarius answered him that he was a Christian, and such he was resolved always to remain. However, apprehensive of the dangers in which he lived, he soon after chose rather to resign his post, than to run the hazard of his faith and a good conscience. He therefore left the court, though the emperor endeavoured earnestly to detain him. After the miserable death of the apostate, he appeared again with distinction in the courts of Jovian and Valens, and was made by the latter Comes rerum privatarum, or treasurer of the imperial rents; which office was but a step to higher dignities. In the discharge of this employment in Bithynia, he happened to be at Nice in the great earthquake which swallowed up the chief part of the city in 368. The treasurer with some few others escaped by being preserved, through a wonderful providence, in certain hollow parts of the ruins. St Gregory improved this opportunity to urge him again to quit the world and its honours, and to consecrate to God alone a life for which he was indebted to him on so many accounts. (18) Cæsarius, moved by so awakening an accident, listened to this advice, and took a resolution to renounce the world: but returning home fell sick and died in the fervour of his sacrifice, about the beginning of the year 368, leaving his whole estate to the poor. (b) He is named in the Roman martyrology on the 25th. of February. St Gre-

(15) Or. 3. p. 53. (16) Or. 12.

(17) Ep. 17. (18) Ep. 16.

(b) His will was comprised in these words: "I bequeath my whole substance to the poor." Τα ἐμὰ πάντα βούλομαι γίνεσθαι τῶν πτωχῶν.

gory, extolling his virtue, says, that whilst he enjoyed the honours of the world, he looked upon the advantage of being a Christian as the first of his dignities, and the most glorious of all his titles; reckoning all the rest dross and dung. He was buried at Nazianzum, and our saint pronounced his funeral panegyric, as he also did that of his holy sister Gorgonia, who died soon after. He extols her humility, her prayer often continued whole nights with tears; her modesty, prudence, patience, resignation, zeal, respect for the ministers of God and for holy places; her liberality to them, and great charity to the poor, her penance, extraordinary care of the education of her children, &c. He mentions as miraculous her being cured of a palsy by praying at the foot of the altar; and her recovery after great wounds and bruises, which she had received by a fall from her chariot.

In 372, Cappadocia was divided by the emperor into two provinces, and Tyana made the capital of that which was called the second. Anthimus bishop of that city pretended hence to an archiepiscopal jurisdiction over the second Cappadocia. St Basil, the metropolitan of Cappadocia, maintained that the civil division of the province had not infringed his jurisdiction, though he afterwards, for the sake of peace, yielded the second Cappadocia to the see of Tyana. He appointed our saint bishop of Sasina, a small town in that division. Gregory stood out a long time, but at length submitted, overcome by the authority of his father and the influence of his friend. He accordingly received the episcopal consecration from the hands of St Basil, at Cæsarea, about the middle of the year 372. But he repaired to Nazianzum to wait a favourable opportunity of taking possession of his church of Sosima, which never happened: for Anthimus, who had in his interest the new governor, and was master of all the avenues and roads to that town, would by no means admit him. Basil reproached his friend with sloth: but St Gregory answered him that he was not disposed to fight for a church. (19) He, however, charged himself with the government of that of Nazianzum under his father till his death, which happened the year following. St Gregory pronounced his funeral panegyric in presence of St Basil and of his mother St Nonna, who died shortly after. Holy solitude had been the constant object of his most earnest desires, and he had only waited the death of his father entirely to bury himself in it. Nevertheless, yielding to the importunities of others, and to the necessities of the church of Nazianzum, he consented to continue his care of it till the neighbouring bishops could provide it with a pastor. But seeing this affair protracted, and finding himself afflicted with various distempers, he left that city, and withdrew to Seleucia, the metropolis of Isauri, in 375, where he continued five years. The death of St Basil, in 379, was to him a sensible affliction, and he then composed twelve epigrams or epitaphs to his memory; and some years after pronounced his panegyric at Cæsarea, namely, in 381 or 382. The unhappy death of the persecuting emperor Valens, in 378, restored peace to the church. The Catholic pastors sought means to make up the breaches which heresy had made in many places. For this end they held several assemblies, and sent zealous and learned men into those provinces in which the tyrant had made the greatest havock. The church of Constantinople was of all others in the most desolate and abandoned condition, having groaned during forty years under the tyranny of the Ariâns, and the few Catholics who remained there having been long without a pastor, and even without a church wherein to assemble. They being well acquainted with our saint's merit, importuned him to come to their assistance, and were backed by several bishops, desirous that his learning, eloquence and piety, might restore that church to its splendor. But such were the pleasures he enjoyed in his beloved retirement at Seleucia, and in his thorough disengagement from the world, that, for some time, these united solicitations made little or no impression on him. They had, however, at length their desired effect. His body, bent with age, his head bald, his countenance exte-nuated with tears and austerities, his poor garb, and his extreme poverty, made but a mean appearance at Constantinople; and no wonder that he was at first ill received in that polite and proud city. The Arians pursued him with calumnies, raileries and insults. The prefects and governors added their persecutions to the fury of the populace, all which concurred to acquire him the glorious title of confessor. He lodged first in the house of certain relations, where the Catholics first assembled to hear him. He soon after converted it into a church, and gave it the name of Anastasia, or the Resurrection, because the Catholic Faith, which in that city had been hitherto oppressed, here seemed to be raised, as it were, from the dead. Sozomen relates that this name was confirmed to it by a miraculous raising to life of a woman then with child, who was killed by falling from a gallery in it, but returned to life by the prayers of the congregation (20). Another circumstance afterwards confirmed to this church the same name. During the reign of the emperor Leo the Thracian, about the year 460, the body of St Anastasia, virgin and martyr, was brought from Sirmich to Constantinople, and laid in this place, as is recorded by Theodorus the Reader (21.) But this church is not to be confounded with another of the same name which was in hands of the Novatians under Constantius and Julian the Apostate (22).

(19) Ep. 32.

In this small church Nazianzen preached, and every day assembled his little flock, which encreased daily. The Arians and Apollinarists, joined with other sects, not content to defame and calumniate him, had recourse to violence on his person. They pelted him with stones as he went along the streets, and dragged him before the civil magistrates as a malefactor, charging him with tumult and sedition. But he comforted himself, on reflecting that, though they were the stronger party, he had the better cause; though they possessed the churches, God was with him; if they had the populace on their side, the angels were on his, to guard him. St Jerom, coming out of the deserts of Syria to Constantinople, became the disciple and scholar of St Gregory, and was one of those who studied the holy scripture under him, of which that great doctor glories in his writings. Our holy pastor, being a lover of solitude, seldom went abroad, or made any visits, except such as were indispensable; and the time that was not employed in the discharge of his functions he devoted to prayer and meditation, spending a considerable part of the night in those holy exercises. His diet was herbs and a little salt with bread. His cheeks were furrowed with the tears which he shed, and he daily prostrated himself before God to implore his light and mercy upon his people. His profound learning, his faculty of forming the most noble conceptions of things, and the admirable perspicuity, elegance and propriety, with which he explained them, charmed all who heard him. The Catholics flocked to his discourses as men parching with thirst eagerly go to the spring to quench it. Heretics and pagans resorted to them, admiring his erudition, and charmed with his eloquence. The fruits of his sermons were every day sensible: his flock became in a short time very numerous, and he purged the people of that poison which had corrupted their hearts for many years. St Gregory heard with blushing and confusion the applause and acclamations with which his discourses were received; and his fear of this danger made him speak in public with a certain timidity and reluctance. He scorned to flatter the great ones, and directed his discourses to explain and corroborate the Catholic Faith, and reform the manners of the people. He taught them that the way to salvation was not to be ever disputing about matters of religion (an abuse that was grown to a great height at that time in Constantinople) but to keep the commandments, (23) to give alms, to exercise hospitality, to visit and serve the sick, to pray, sigh, and weep; to mortify the senses, repress anger, watch over the tongue, and subject the body to the spirit. The envy of the devil and of his instruments could not bear the success of his labours, and by exciting troubles, found means to interrupt them. Maximus, a native of Alexandria, a cynic philosopher, but withal a Christian, full of the impudence and pride of that sect, came to Constantinople; and, under an hypocritical exterior, disguised a heart full of envy, ambition, covetousness and gluttony. He imposed on several, and for some time on St Gregory himself, who pronounced an Eulogium of this man, in 379, now extant under the title of the Eulogium of the Philosopher Hero; but St Jerom assures us, that instead of Hero we ought to read Maximus. This wolf in sheep's clothing having gained one of the priests of the city, and some partisans among the laity, procured himself to be ordained bishop of Constantinople, in a clandestine manner, by certain Egyptian bishops who lately arrived on that intent. The irregularity of this proceeding, stirred up all the world against the usurper. Pope Damasus writ to testify his affliction on that occasion, and called the election null. The emperor Theodosius the Great then at Thessalonica, rejected Maximus with indignation; and coming to Constantinople proposed to Demophilus, the Arian bishop, either to receive the Nicene faith, or to leave the city; and, upon his preferring the latter, his majesty embracing St Gregory, assured him, that the catholics of Constantinople demanded him for their bishop, and that their choice was most agreeable to his own desires. Theodosius, within a few days after his arrival, drove the Arians out of all the churches in the city, and put the saint in possession of the church of St Sophia, upon which all the other churches of the city depended. Here the clamours of the people were so vehement that Gregory might be their bishop, that all was in confusion till the saint prevailed upon them to drop that subject, and to join in praise and thanksgiving to the ever-blessed Trinity, for restoring among them the profession of the true faith. The emperor highly commended the modesty of the saint. But a council was necessary to declare the see vacant, and the promotion of the Arian Demophilus, and of the cynic Maximus, void and null. A synod of all the East was then meeting at Constantinople, in which St Meletius, patriarch of Antioch, presided. He being the great friend and admirer of Nazianzen, the council took his cause into consideration before all others; declared the election of Maximus null, and established St Gregory bishop of Constantinople, without having any regard to his tears and expostulations. St Meletius dying during the synod, St Gregory presided in the latter sessions. To put an end to the schism between Meletius and Paulinus at Antioch, it had been agreed that the survivor should remain in sole possession of that see. This Nazianzen urged: but the oriental bishops were unwilling to own for patriarch one whom they had opposed. They therefore took great offence at this most just and prudent remonstrance, and entered into a conspiracy with his enemies against him. The saint, who had only consented to his election through the importunity of others, was most ready to relinquish his new dignity. This his enemies sought to deprive him of, together with his life, on which they made several attempts. Once in particular they hired a ruffian to assassinate him. But the villain, touched with remorse, repaired to the saint with many tears, wringing his hands, beating his breast, and confessing his black attempt, which he should have put in execution had not providence interposed. The good bishop replied: "May God forgive you: his gracious preservation obliges me freely to pardon you. Your attempt has now made you mine. One only thing I beg of you, that you forsake your heresy, and sincerely give yourself to God." Some warm catholics complained of his lenity and indulgence towards the Arians, especially those who had shewn themselves violent persecutors under the former reigns.

(20) Sozom. l. 7. c. 5. (21) L. 2. p. 191. (22) Socr. l. 2. c. 38.

(23) Carm. 1.

In the mean time, the bishops of Egypt, and those of Macedonia, arriving at the council, though all equally in the interest of Paulinus of Antioch, complained that Gregory's election was uncanonical, it being forbidden by the canons to transfer bishops from one see to another. Nazianzen calmly answered, that those canons had lost their force by long disuse : which was most notorious in the East. Nor did they in the least regard his case ; for he had never taken possession of the see of Sasima, and only governed that of Nazianzum, as vicar under his father. However, seeing a great ferment among the prelates and people, he cried out in the assembly : “ If my holding the see of Constantinople gives any disturbance, behold I am very willing, like Jonas, to be cast into the sea to appease the storm, though I did not raise it. If all followed my example, the church would enjoy an uninterrupted tranquillity. This dignity I never desired ; I took this charge upon me much against my will. If you think fit, I am most ready to depart ; and I will return back to my little cottage, that you may remain here quiet, and the church of God enjoy peace. I only desire that the see may be filled by a person that is capable, and willing to defend the faith.” (24) He thereupon left the assembly, overjoyed that he had broken his bands. The bishops, whom he left in surprise, but too readily accepted his resignation. The saint went from the council to the palace, and, falling on his knees before the emperor, and kissing his hand, said : “ I am come, Sir, to ask neither riches nor honours for myself or friends, nor ornaments for the churches : but licence to retire. Your majesty knows how much against my will I was placed in this chair. I displease even my friends, on no other account than because I value nothing but God. I beseech you, and make this my last petition, that among your trophies and triumphs you make this the greatest, that you bring the church to unity and concord.” The emperor, and those about him, were astonished at such a greatness of soul, and he with much difficulty was prevailed on to give his assent. This being obtained, the saint had no more to do than to take his leave of the whole city, which he did in a pathetic discourse, delivered in the metropolitan church before the hundred and fifty fathers of the council, and an incredible multitude of people. (25) He describes the condition in which he had found that church on his first coming to it, and that in which he left it; and gives to God his thanks, and the honour of the re-establishment of the catholic faith in that city. He makes a solemn protestation of the disinterestedness of his own conduct during his late administration; not having touched any part of the revenues of the see of Constantinople the whole time. He reproaches the city with the love of shows, luxury, and magnificence, and says he was accused of too great mildness, also of a meanness of spirit, from the lowly appearance he made with respect both to dress and table. He vindicates his behaviour in these regards, saying: "I did not take it to be any part of my duty to vie with consuls, generals and governors, who know not how to employ their riches otherwise than in pomp and show. Neither did I imagine, that the necessary subsistence of the poor was to be applied to the support of luxury, good cheer, a prancing horse, a sumptuous chariot, and a long train of attendants. If I have acted in another manner, and have thereby given offence, the fault is already committed, and cannot be recalled; but I hope is not unpardonable." He concludes by bidding a moving farewell to his church, to his dear Anastasia, which he calls, in the language of St Paul, his glory and his crown; to the cathedral and all the other parishes of the city, to the holy apostles as honoured in the magnificent church (in which Constantius had placed the relicks of St Andrew, St Luke, and St Timothy), to his episcopal throne, to the clergy, to the holy monks and the other pious servants of God, to the emperor and all the court with its jealousies, pomp and ambition, to the East and West divided in his cause, to the tutelar angels of his church, and to the sacred Trinity honoured in that place. He concludes with these words: "My dear children, preserve the depositum of faith, and remember the stones which have been thrown at me, because I planted it in your hearts." The saint was most tenderly affected in abandoning his dear flock, his converts especially, which he had gained at his first church of Anastasia, as they had already signalized themselves in his service by, suffering persecutions with patience for his sake. They followed him weeping, and intreating him to abide with them. He was not insensible to their tears; but motives of greater weight obliged him not to regard them on this occasion. St Gregory, seeing himself at liberty, rejoiced in his happiness, as he expressed himself some time after to a friend, in these words: "What advantages have not I found in the jealousy of my enemies! They have delivered me from the fire of Sodom, by drawing me from the dangers of the episcopal charge." (26) This treatment was the recompence with which men rewarded the labours and merit of a saint, whom they ought to have sought in the remotest corners of the earth: but that city was not worthy to possess so great and holy a pastor. He had in that short time brought over the chief part of its inhabitants to the catholic faith, as appears from his works; and from St Ambrose (27). He had conquered the obstinacy of heretics by meekness and patience, and thought it a sufficient revenge for their former persecutions that he had it in his power to chastise them (28). The catholics he induced to shew the same moderation towards them, and exhorted them to serve Jesus Christ, by taking a Christian revenge of them, the bearing their persecutions with patience, and the overcoming evil with good (29). Besides establishing the purity of faith, he had begun a happy reformation of manners among the people; and much greater fruits were to be expected from his zealous labours. Nectarius, who succeeded him, was a soft man, and by no means equal to such a charge. For, though he was a Roman senator, and prætor or governor of Constantinople, he was not only a layman, but not yet baptized when elected, and had lived incontinently: which circumstances, joined with the notorious imprudence of some of his actions, suffice to shew that Socrates was too lavish in the commendations bestowed on him. He seems also, says Tillemont, to have had no more the gift of speaking than a mûte: and Palladius makes the same observation on his brother

(24) Carm. 1.

(25) Or. 32.

(26) Ep. 73. (27) L. de Spir. Sancto. (28) Or. 32. (29) Or. 24.

Arsacius, who was intruded into the chair of St Chrysostom. Before St Gregory had resigned the see of Constantinople, he drew up his last will and testament, which is still extant, signed by six bishops and a priest, and written according to the formalities of the Roman law. He confirms in it the donation of his estate both real and personal to the church and poor of Nazianzum, except some small annuities for life, which he bequeathed to certain poor friends and servants.

Before the election of Nectarius he left the city, and returned to Nazianzum. In that retirement he composed the poem on his own life, particularly dwelling on what he had done at Constantinople to obviate the scandalous slanders which were published against him. He laboured to place a bishop at Nazianzum, but was hindered by the opposition of many of the clergy. Sickness obliged him to withdraw soon after to Arianzum, probably before the end of the year 381. In his solitude he testifies, (30) that he regretted the absence of his friends, though he seemed insensible to every thing else of this world. To punish himself for superfluous words (though he had never spoke to the disparagement of any neighbour) he, in 382, passed the forty days of Lent in absolute silence. In his desert he never refused spiritual advice to any that resorted to him for it. In his parænetic poem to St Olympias, he lays down excellent rules for the conduct of married women. Among other precepts he says: "In the first place, honour God; then respect your husband as the eye of your life; for he is to direct your conduct and actions. Love only him; make him your joy, and your comfort. Take care never to give him any occasion of offence or disgust. Yield to him in his anger: comfort and assist him in his pains and afflictions, speaking to him with sweetness and tenderness, and making him prudent and modest remonstrances at seasonable times. It is not by violence and strength that the keepers of lions endeavour to tame them when they see them enraged; but they sooth and caress them, stroking them gently, and speaking with a soft voice. Never let his weaknesses be the subject of your reproaches. It can never be just or allowable for you to treat a person in this manner whom you ought to prefer to the whole world." He prays that this holy woman might become the mother of many children; that there might be the more souls to sing the praises of Jesus Christ. (c) He often repeats this important advice, that every one begin and end every action by offering his heart and whatever he does to God by a short prayer. (31) For we owe to God all that we are or have; and he accepts and rewards the smallest action, not so much with a view to its importance, as to the affection of the heart, which in its poverty gives what it has, and is able to give in return for God's benefits, and in acknowledgment of his sovereignty.

St Gregory had been obliged to govern the vacant see of Nazianzum after the death of his father, leaving the chief care of that church to Cledonius in his absence. But in 382, he procured Eulalius to be ordained bishop of that city, and spent the remainder of his life in retirement near Arianzum; still continuing to aid that church with his advice, though at that time very old and infirm. In this private abode he had a garden, a fountain, and a shady grove, in which he took much delight. Here, in company with certain solitaries, he lived estranged from pleasures, and in the practice of bodily mortification, fasting, watching, and praying much on his knees. "I live," says he, "among rocks and with wild beasts, never seeing any fire or using shoes; having only one single garment. (32) I am the outcast and the scorn of men. I lie on straw, clad in sackcloth: my floor is always moist with the tears I shed." (33) In the decline of life he set himself to write pious poems for the edification of such among the faithful as were fond of music and poetry. He had also a mind to oppose the poems made use of by the Apollinarist heretics to propogate their errors, by such as were orthodox, useful, and religious, as the priest Gregory says in his life. He considered this exercise also as a work of penance, compositions in metre being always more difficult than those in prose. He therein recounts the history of his life and sufferings: he publishes his faults, his weaknesses, and his temptations, enlarging much more on these than on his great actions. He complains of the annoyance of his rebellious flesh, notwithstanding his great age, his ill state of health and his austerities; acknowledging himself wholly indebted to the divine grace which had always preserved in him the treasure of virginity inviolable. God suffered him to feel these temptations that he might not be exposed to the snares of vanity and pride; and that, whilst his soul dwelt in heaven, he might be put in mind, by the rebellion of the body, that he was still on earth in a state of war. His poems are full of cries of ardent love, by which he conjures Jesus Christ to assist him, without whose grace he declares we are only dead carcases exhaling the stench of sin, and as incapable of making one step as a bird is of flying without air, or a fish of swimming without water: for he alone makes us see, act, and run. (34) He joined great watchfulness to prayer, especially shunning the conversation and neighbourhood of women, (35) over and above the assiduous maceration of his body. In his letters he gives to others the same advice, of which his own life was a constant example. One instance shall suffice. Sacerdos, a holy priest, was fallen into an unjust persecution through slander. St Gregory writes to him thus in his third letter: "What evil can happen to us after all this? None certainly, unless we by our own fault lose God and virtue. Let all other things fall out as it shall please God. He is the master of our life, and knows the reason of every thing that befalls us. Let us only fear to do any thing unworthy our piety. We have fed the poor, we have served our brethren, we have sung the psalms with cheerfulness. If we are no longer permitted to continue this, let us employ our devotion some other way. Grace is not barren, and opens different ways to heaven. Let us live in retirement: let us occupy ourselves in contemplation; let us purify our souls by the light of God. This perhaps will be no less a sacrifice than any thing we can do." (d) These were St Gregory's occupations

(31) Or. 1. p. 1. Or. 9. p. 152, 153, 154, &c. (32) Carm. 5 & 6c. (33) Carm. 147.

(c) Quo plures celebrent magni praeconia regis. Naz. T. 2. p. 144.

(34) Carm. 59.

(35) Ep. 196. p. 894.

(d) The writings of St Gregory consist first of forty-six genuine orations (the four last of the fifty published in his works being doubtful or spurious) and two discourses to Cleodnius against the Apollinarians, which were originally letters. These orations treat of several points of morality, and mysteries of faith: others are written in confutation of heresies, others are panegyrics of martyrs spoken on their festivals. His writings contain also 237 letters, and 158 poems, published by the learned Billius. Tollius printed at Utrecht in 1695 twenty other poems of St Gregory, called the Cygnean Verses. The indefatigable Muratori, librarian to the duke of Modena, published in 1709, 227 epigrams of our saint. In the 121st and 122d he testifies, that his mother obtained his birth by prayer, and that once when dangerously sick he was restored to his health, by the holy table, that is, the sacrifice of the altar. He teaches and practises the invocation of saints in many places. He relates that St Justina begged the Virgin Mary to assist her, a virgin. (Or. 18. p. 279, 280.) He says, "the souls of the saints know our affairs:" (Ep. 201. p. 898.) and, speaking of St Athanasius, "that he now beholds from heaven our concernments, and stretches out his hand to those who are fighting for virtue, and so much the more as he is now freed from the bonds of the flesh." (Or. 24. p. 435.) He prays St Basil to intercede in heaven for those whom he governed or loved on earth. (Or. 20. p. 372, 373.) He prays St Cyprian to assist him. (Or. 18. p. 286.) He reproaches Julian, that he refused to honour the bodies of the martyrs which cured distempers, and expelled devils, to whom men paid honours and instituted festivals. Hence Dailé the Calvinist, accuses this holy doctor of having promoted the honouring of saints by words and example, (de relig. cultu, p. 51.) This holy doctor says, that the ashes of St Cyprian even to his time, chased away devils, and cured diseases, as those loudly testified who had experienced it. (Or. 18. p. 285.) He inveighs against the heathens that, under Julian the apostate, they burnt the sepulchres of the martyrs, and scattered their relics in the wind, or mingled them with the remains of the basest men, that they might deprive those of the honour due to them. (Or. 4. p. 126.) Julian himself reproaches the Christians, that under their persecutions at Antioch, which they had suffered seven months, they had bethought themselves of no other means of defending themselves, than of sending the old women to pray constantly for a deliverance before the tombs of the martyrs. Odiſſam iſtam ſeveritatem ſepiſimum jam menſem perpeſſi, vota quidem et preces, quo tantis malis eriperemur ad vetulas dimiſimus quæ circum ſepulchra mortuorum aſſiduè verſantur. (Julian in Miſopog. p. 54.) If the style of St Basil is from the time of his last retirement till his happy death in 389, or according to others, in 391. Tillemont gives him only sixty or sixty-one years of age, but he was certainly considerably older. The Latins honour him on the 9th of May. The emperor Constantine Porphyrogenitus caused his ashes to be translated from Nazianzum to Constantinople, and to be laid in the church of the apostles: which was done with great pomp in 950. They were brought to Rome in the crusades, and lie under an altar in the Vatican church. This great saint looked upon the smiles and frowns of the world with indifference, because spiritual and heavenly goods wholly ingrossed his soul. "Let us never esteem worldly prosperity or adversity as things real or of any moment," said he (36), "but let us live elsewhere, and raise all our attention to heaven, esteeming sin as the only true evil, and nothing truly good but virtue, which unites us to God." He requires the most perfect disengagement of ourselves from earthly things that we may give ourselves to God without reserve or restriction. "Let us offer ourselves entire to God," says he, "that in him we may find ourselves again entire. (37). . . It is true and great riches is the more smooth and easy of the two, that of Nazianzen is the more florid and majestic. He always forms the most noble conceptions of things, and clothes his meaning with delicacy and elegance. His language glows and the pathos swells so high, that Erasmus was deterred from undertaking to translate his works, distinguished by a vivacity in his style, and frequent remote allusions. (Vid l. 26. ep. 33. p. 1446.) Some esteem St Gregory the greatest of all orators whether sacred or profane. (Du Pin. Bibl. p. 655.) Others give the first place among orators to him and St Basil. It is certain, that if he has any fault, it is rather an excess of beauties, and a redundancy of figures and flowers. His verses, in ease, smoothness and sublimity, surpass those of all other ecclesiastical writers, and deserve to be read in schools. The best Latin translation of this father's works is that of the learned abbot of St Michael's. Abbe Billi, printed at Paris in 1600, and 1630, in two volumes in folio. Few translators have, in all accomplishments for that difficult province, equalled this great linguist, and judicious editor. This translation, with some amendments, is retained by Dom Marand and his colleagues in the excellent complete edition which they are preparing of this father's works.

(36) Ep. 189. (37) Or. 40.

to be destitute of earthly goods for his sake who was pleased to suffer poverty for the love of us." (38) This consecration of ourselves to God is our own infinite interest, but the goodness of God is the motive which ought most strongly to invite us to make it. This St Gregory was never able to consider without raptures of adoration and astonishment, in which he cried out: (39) "Admire the excess of God's goodness. He vouchsafes to accept our desires as if they were a thing of great value. He burns with an ardent desire that we vehemently desire and love him; and he receives the petition we put up for his benefits as if this was a benefit to himself, and a favour we did him: he gives with greater joy than it can be to us to receive what he gives. Let us only be careful not to be too indifferent in our requests, or to set too narrow bounds to our desires and pretensions; and let us never ask frivolous things which it would be unworthy of his magnificence to petition him for. . . . There is nothing so great before God which the least among men is not able to offer him, as well as the greatest prince or most profound scholar: give but yourself to him with the most pure and perfect love."

ON THE SAME DAY.

St HERMAS, a Christian of distinction in Rome, whom St Paul salutes. (1) Origen believes him to have been the author of the book entitled Pastor, and certain modern writers fall in with this conjecture. But that seems rather to have been the work of a latter Hermas. Some indeed with Tillemont, Ceillier, &c. conclude from the contents that it was compiled before the persecution of Domitian in 95: but Du Guet (2), and others think it was only written about the year 142, against the Montanists and their false prophets. It is quoted by St Clement of Alexandria, Origen, Tertullian, Eusebius, St Jerom, &c. &c. It is divided into three books; the first contains Revelations; the second Precepts; and the third Similitudes, which resemble the revelations of the first. The author enti-

(38) Or. 40. (39) Ibid. (1) Rom. xvi. 14. (2) Diss. 1.

bles his work Pastor, or the shepherd, from the angel his monitor, who assumed the appearance of a shepherd, and whose dictates he professes to write. He assigns to every one not only an angel-guardian, but also a devil who is his tempter; he recommends prayers, alms-deeds, and other good works on fast-days: mentions a state of continency with approbation; says that penance which is followed by frequent relapses is generally fruitless. Bishop Wake published an English translation of this work, together with the epistles of St Clements, St Barnabas, St Ignatius and St Polycarp, in 1693, and republished the same in 1710.

St NICHOLAS, Bishop of Lincopen in Sweden, C. Herman and Margaret, the parents of our saint, were citizens of Skeningen in Sweden, and held a distinguished rank in the country, which they rendered more illustrious by their virtue. By their care Nicholas was imbued from the cradle with the perfect spirit of Christian piety, and taught to dread nothing so much as whatever could tarnish the robe of innocence and grace with which he had been clothed in the sacred laver of baptism. In these happy disposition she studied at home the first elements of grammar, and whilst yet very young, was sent to Paris in order to accomplish himself in the sciences. Thence he removed to Orleans, where he both completed his theological course, and took his degrees in civil and canon law. Perfectly qualified by learning and virtue for the service of the church he returned home, and was soon after appointed archdeacon of Lincopen. His whole life was a perfect sacrifice of penance and devotion. On Fridays he took no other nourishment than bread with a little salt and water, and-sometimes passed that whole day from Thursday evening till Saturday noon without food. In the discharge of his office he suffered with unshaken constancy and patience many grievous persecutions from the tyranny of great men and incorrigible sinners, reformed the manners of a savage and ignorant people, and established the rules of virtue and ecclesiastical discipline. Herbert, the first bishop of Lincopen, some pretend to have been cotemporary with Charlemagne ; but the more accurate antiquarians place him about the year 1000, something younger than St Sigfrid. The history of the bishops of Lincopen in Swedish verse (1) informs us, that Gotscale, the 16th bishop of Lincopen, dying, St Nicholas was advanced to that see. This dignity was a fresh spur to his zeal in promoting the divine honour, and to his fervour in every religious exercise. Raised above all views to his own private interest, in every thing he laid himself out for the service of God and his neighbour, and for the maintenance of peace among all men. His meekness and patience were proof to all trials : and prayer and heavenly meditation were to him a source of spiritual light, comfort and strength. The study of the holy scriptures was principally his private entertainment : out of the most useful sentences of the canon law and fathers, he compiled an excellent book, which he called Huite-book. He wrote short comments on the Morals of St Gregory, certain works of St Anselm, and the writings of St Bridget, whose canonization he warmly promoted, but died in the year in which that affair was finished. He wrote the lives of St Bridget, St Ansharius and some other holy servants of God : and compiled a book of flowers out of the psalms. How highly pope Urban VI. honoured his sanctity, appears from a letter wrote by that pope in 1381, quoted by Benzelius. His successor bishop Canut speaks of his sanctity with great veneration. (2) St Nicholas died in our Lord in 1391, and was honoured in Sweden among the titular saints of the kingdom, with St Sigfrid, St Brinolph, S. Birget, S. Helen of Scoduc, S. Catherine and St Ingridie of Scheningen, who died in 1282, who are invoked together in the prayer of the mass for the feast of St Nicholas, in the old Swedish Missal quoted by Benzelius. See the long particular office and lessons in honour of this saint, formerly used in the church of Lincopen, printed at Sudercopen in 1523, and repub-

(1) Published by Benzelius, Mon. Suec. p. 125. (2) Canutus episc. Lincop. ep. ad archiep. Upsal. apud Benzeli. Mon. Suec. p. 160.

lished by Benzelius in his Monumenta Ecclesie Suevogo- thicae, p. 109. Also the Swedish Chronicle of the bishops of Lincopen, ib. p. 125. and this editor's notes,
p. 254.

St BRYNOTH I. Bishop of Scara in Sweden, C. St Sigfrid, apostle of Sweden, consecrated St Unno, an Englishman, first bishop of Scara, in the province of West-Gothland, in Sweden. Brynoth, son of Algoth Folcung, was from him the twenty-second bishop of this church, which he governed thirty-eight years with admirable zeal and sanctity, and dying on the 6th of February in 1317, was honoured in Sweden amongst the saints. See the catalogue of the bishops of Scara in Swedish verses, divided into stanzas, wrote under their pictures in the palace of stone built by Brynoth III. bishop of that see, in the decline of the fifteenth century, preserved by Benzelius junior, in Monum. Ecclesie Suevogo- thicae, p. 78. & not. p. 231. See also on this saint Messenius, in Chronologia Scandia, ad annos 1278. 1287. 1289. 1317. and Analectorum, T. 2. p. 131. 139. 141. and his Historia Sanctorum & Præsulum Scandia, aucta a Joan. Perinksgieldo, in Messenius's Scandia Illustrata. Stockholmiae, 1700. in 10 Tom. fol. See also John Vastovius, published by Benzelius, p. 78.

MAY X.

ST ANTONINUS, ARCHBISHOP OF FLORENCE, CONFESSOR.

From the bull of his canonization, his exact life by Castiglione, a contemporary priest, canon of Florence, and other writers of that age, collected by F. Gouron, T. 3. p. 319. See Papebroke, Act. Sanct. T. 1. Maij, p. 311. And the history of his chapel in the Dominicans church of St Mark at Florence, and of the translation of his body into the same in 1589, printed at Florence in fol. 1728. Also S. Antonini Summa Theologica cum annotationibus et vitâ auctoris, per Fratres Ballerinos, Petrum et Hieronimum, sacerdotes Veronenses, 4 vol. in folio, Veronæ. 1740.

A. D. 1459.

ST ANTONINUS, OR LITTLE ANTONY, was born at Florence, in 1389. His parents, named Nicholas Pierozzi, and Thomassina, were noble citizens of that place, and he was the only fruit of their marriage. From the cradle he was modest, bashful, docile, and had no inclination but to piety, being even then an enemy both to sloth and to the amusements of children. It was his only pleasure to read the lives of saints and other good books, to converse with pious persons, or employ himself in prayer, to which he was much given from his infancy. Accordingly, if he was not at home or at school, he was always to be found at St Michael's church before a crucifix, or in our Lady's chapel there. And whether he applied himself to that holy exercise in his closet or the church, he always kneeled or lay prostrate, with a perseverance that astonished every body. By the means of a happy memory, a solid judgment and quick penetration, assisted by an assiduous application, he became an able master at an age when others scarce begin to understand the first elements of the sciences. But his passion for learning was not equal to his ardour to perfect himself in the science of salvation. In prayer, he begged nothing of God but his grace to avoid sin, and to do his holy will in all things. F. Dominick, a learned and holy preacher of the Order of St Dominick, afterwards made cardinal, archbishop of Ragusa, and legate of the holy see, was then employed in building a convent at Fiesoli, two miles from Florence. Antoninus was wonderfully delighted with the unction of his sermons, and never went out of Florence, but to converse with that apostolic man, to whom he applied at last for the Dominican habit. The father, judging him as yet too young, and his constitution too tender for so strict a life of perpetual abstinence, frequent fasts, long watchings, and other rigours, advised him to wait yet some years, and bid him first study the canon law; adding, that when he should have learned Gratian's decree by heart, his request should be granted. So dry and difficult a task would have seemed to another equivalent to an absolute refusal. However, Antoninus set about it, and joining prayer and severe mortification with his studies, made an essay of the life to which he aspired; and in less than a year presented himself again to the prior of Fiesoli, and by answering his examination upon the whole, decree of Gratian, gave him a surprising proof of his capacity, memory, and fervour. The prior hesitated no longer, but gave him the habit, he being then sixteen years of age. The young novice was most exact in complying with every point of the rule, and appeared the most humble, the most obedient, most mortified, and most recollected of his brethren. Being advanced to the priesthood, he augmented his exercises of piety; he was never seen at the altar but bathed in tears. Whether sick or well, he lay always on the hard boards. And so perfectly had he subjected the flesh to the spirit, that he seemed to feel no reluctance from his senses in the service of God. He was chosen very young to govern the great convent of the Minerva, in Rome; and after that was successively prior at Naples, Cajeta, Cortona, Sienna, Fiesoli, and Florence: in all which places he zealously enforced the practice of the rule of St Dominick, and more by his actions than words. Besides his domestic employments, he preached often, and with great fruit. The works which he published increased his reputation. He was consulted from Rome, and from all quarters, especially in intricate cases of the canon law. The learned cardinal de Lucca reckons him among the most distinguished auditors or judges of the Rota, though we do not find at what time he discharged that office. He was chosen vicar or general superior of a numerous reformed congregation in his Order. He would not remit any thing in his austerities or labours when exhausted by a decay; of which however he recovered. Pope Eugenius IV. called him to the general council of Florence; and he assisted in ¹⁴³⁹ quality of divine at all its sessions, and at the disputations with the Greeks. During his stay at Florence he was made prior of the convent of St Mark in that city, for which Cosmus of Medicis, called the Father of his country, was then building a sumptuous church, which pope Eugenius IV. consecrated. After having established in this house the true spirit of his Order, he visited his convents in Tuscany and Naples.

His Father was Nich de Forzeiglione. his grand father Pierozzi. See Ord. Pre.

While employed in introducing the primitive discipline of his Order in the province of Naples, the see of Florence became vacant by the death of its archbishop. The intrigues of several candidates protracted the election of a successor. But pope Eugenius IV. no sooner named F. Antoninus to the Florentines, as possessed of the qualities they had desired in their future bishop, namely, sanctity, learning and experience, and his being a native of their own city, than they all acquiesced in his choice. Antoninus, who had then been two years absent from Florence, employed in the visitation of his monasteries, was equally surprised and afflicted that he should have been thought of for so eminent a dignity. And that he might escape it, he set out with the design of concealing himself in the isle of Sardinia; but being prevented in the execution, he was obliged to go to Sienna, whence he wrote to the pope, conjuring his holiness not to lay that formidable burden on his weak shoulders, alleging his being in the decline of life, worn out with fatigues and sickness; enlarging also upon his great unworthiness and want of capacity: and begging that he would not now treat him as an enemy whom he had honoured with so many marks of friendship. He could not close his letter without watering it with his tears. The pope, however, was inflexible, and sent him an order to repair without delay to his convent at Fiesoli. He wrote at the same time to the city of Florence, to acquaint them that he had sent them an archbishop to their gates. The principal persons of the clergy and nobility, with Cosmus of Medicis at their head, went out to compliment him on that occasion; but found him so averse to the dignity, that all their intreaties to take it upon him were to no purpose: till the pope, being again applied to in the affair, sent him an order to obey, backing it with a threat of excommunication if he persisted in opposing the will of God. After many tears Antoninus at last complied; he was consecrated and took possession of his bishopric in March 1446. His regulation of his household and conduct was a true imitation of the primitive apostolic bishops. His table, dress and furniture, shewed a perfect spirit of poverty, modesty, and simplicity. It was his usual saying, that all the riches of a successor of the apostles ought to be his virtue. He practised all the observances of his rule as far as compatible with his functions. His whole family consisted of six persons, to whom he assigned such salaries as might hinder them from seeking accidental perquisites, which are usually iniquitous or dangerous. He at first appointed two grand vicars, but afterwards, to avoid all occasions of variance, kept only one; and remembering that a bishop is bound to personal service, did almost every thing himself, but always with mature advice. As to his temporalities, he relied entirely on a man of probity and capacity, to reserve himself totally for his spiritual functions. He gave audience every day to all that addressed themselves to him, but particularly declared himself the father and protector of the poor. His purse and his granaries were in a manner totally theirs; when these were exhausted, he gave them often part of his scanty furniture and clothes. He never was possessed of any plate or any other precious moveables, and never kept either dogs or horses; one only mule served all the necessities of his family, and this he often sold for the relief of some poor person: on which occasion some wealthy citizen would buy it, to restore it again as a present to the charitable archbishop. He founded the college of St Martin, to assist persons of reduced circumstances, and ashamed to make known their necessities, which establishment now provides for above six hundred families. His mildness appeared not only in his patience in bearing the insolence and importunities of the poor, but in his sweetness and benevolence towards his enemies. One named Ciardi, whom he had cited before him to answer certain criminal accusations, made an attempt on his life; and the saint narrowly escaped the thrust of his poignard, which pierced the back of his chair. Yet he freely forgave the assassin, and praying for his conversion, had the comfort to see him become a sincere penitent in the Order of St Francis.

The saint wanted not courage whenever the honour of God required it. He suppressed games of hazard; reformed other abuses in all orders; preached almost every Sunday and holyday, and visited his whole diocese every year, always on foot. His character for wisdom and integrity was such, that he was consulted from all parts, and by persons of the highest rank, both secular and ecclesiastical: and his decisions gave so general a satisfaction, that they acquired him the name of Antoninus the Counsellor. Yet this multiplicity of business was no interruption of his attention to God. He allowed himself very little sleep. Over and above the church-office, he recited daily the office of our Lady, and the seven penitential psalms: the office of the dead twice a week, and the whole psalter on every festival. In the midst of his exterior affairs he always preserved the same serenity of countenance, and the same peace of mind, and seemed always recollected in God. Francis Castillo, his secretary, once said to him, bishops were to be pitied if they were to be eternally besieged with hurry as he was. The saint made him this answer, which the author of his life wished to see written in letters of gold: "To enjoy exterior peace, we must always reserve in our hearts amidst all affairs, as it were a secret closet, where we are to keep retired within ourselves, and where no business of the world can ever enter." Pope Eugenius IV. falling sick sent for Antoninus to Rome, made his confession to him, received the viaticum and extreme-unction from his hands, and expired in his arms on the 23d of February 1447. Nicholas IV. succeeded him. St Antoninus having received his benediction, hastened to Florence, where a pestilence had begun to shew itself, which raged the whole year following. The holy archbishop exposed himself first, and employed his clergy both secular and regular, especially those of his own Order, in assisting the infected; so that almost all the friars of St Mark, St Mary Novella, and Fiesoli, were swept away by the contagion, and new recruits were sent from the province of Lombardy to inhabit those houses. The famine, as is usual, followed this first scourge. The holy archbishop stripped himself of almost every thing; and, by the influence of his words and example, many rich persons were moved to do the like. He obtained from Rome, particularly from the pope, great succours for the relief of the distressed. Indeed the pope never refused any thing that he requested; and ordered that no appeals should be received at Rome from any sentence passed by him. After the public calamity was over, the saint continued his liberalities to the poor: but being informed that two blind beggars had amassed, the one two hundred, and the other three hundred ducats, he took the money from them, and distributed it among the real objects of charity; charging himself, however, with the maintenance of those two for the rest of their lives. Humility made him conceal his heroic practices of penance and piety from others, and even from himself; for he saw nothing but imperfections even in what others admired in him, and never heard any thing tending to his own commendation without confusion and indignation. He formed many perfect imitators of his virtue. An accident discovered to him a hidden servant of God. A poor handicraftsman lived in obscurity, in the continual practice of penance, having no other object of his desires but heaven. He passed the Sundays and holydays in the churches, and distributed all he gained by his work, beyond his mean subsistence, among the poor, with the greatest privacy; and kept a poor leper, serving him and dressing his ulcers with his own hands, bearing the continual reproaches and complaints of the ungrateful beggar, not only with patience, but also with joy. The leper became the more morose and imperious, and carried complaints against his benefactor to the archbishop, who discovering this hidden treasure of sanctity in the handicraftsman, secretly honoured it, whilst he punished the insolence of the leper.

Florence was shook by frequent earthquakes during three years from 1453, and a large tract of land was laid desolate by a violent storm. The saint maintained, lodged, and set up again, the most distressed, and re-built their houses. But he laboured most assiduously to render these public calamities instrumental to the reformation of his people's manners. Cosmus of Medicis used to say, that he did not question but the preservation of their republic, under its great dangers, was owing chiefly to the merits and prayers of its holy archbishop. Pope Pius II. has left us, in the second book of his commentaries, a most edifying history of the eminent virtues of our saint, and the strongest testimonies of his sanctity. The love of his flock made him decline a secular embassy to the emperor Frederic III. God called him to the reward of his labours on the 2d of May 1459, in the seventieth year of his age, the thirteenth of his archiepiscopal dignity. He repeated on his death-bed those words, which he had often in his mouth during health, "To serve God is to reign." Pope Pius II. being then at Florence, assisted at his funeral. His hair-shirt and other relics were the instruments of many miracles. He was buried, according to his desire, in the church of St Mark, among his religious brethren, and was canonized by Adrian VI. in 1523. His body was found entire in 1559, and translated, with the greatest pomp and solemnity, into a chapel prepared to receive it in the same church of St. Mark, richly adorned by the two brothers Salviati, (a) whose family looks upon it as their greatest honour that this illustrious saint belonged to it. Nor is it easy to imagine any thing that could surpass the rich embellishments of this chapel, (b) particularly the shrine; nor the pomp and magnificence of the procession and translation, at which a great number of cardinals, bishops and princes, from several parts assisted, who all admired to see the body perfectly free from corruption 130 years after it had been buried.

The venerable Achard, bishop of Avranches, in his excellent treatise On Self-denial, (c) reduces the means and practice of Christian perfection to seven degrees of self-renunciation, by which he is disposed

(a) St Antoninus's principal work is, his Summ of moral divinity, divided into four parts, in which all virtues and vices are explained, the former enforced by pathetic motives and examples, and the latter painted in the most striking colours to inspire Christians with horror. His Chronicle, or tripartite historical Summ, is an abridgment of history from the creation of the world to 1458, the year before his death. He is faithful and candid; but in distant events liable to mistakes. His Little Summ is an instruction of confessors. We have also his treatises on virtues and vices, and some few sermons. See Echard, De Script. Ord. Præd. T. 1. p. 818. and Peter and Jerom Ballerini of Verona, in the life of St Antoninus, in their new edition of his works. Mamachi gave an edition of his Summ with prolix notes printed at Florence in 1741.

(b) Descrizione della Capella di S. Antonino, or, The description of the chapel of St Antoninus, in the Dominicans church of St Mark at Florence: also the history of the Translation of his body into this chapel, printed in fol. in 1728, at Florence.

(c) See this treatise published by the Ven. F. Simon Gourdan, in the 7th Tome of his MS. account of the lives and maxims of the eminent men of St Victor's monastery at Paris, kept in the library of that house. Achard was a native of Normandy, and of the prime nobility of that province: In his youth he studied in England, and was the glory of the clergy of this kingdom. Returning into France, he entered himself among the Regular Canons of St Victor's under the Blessed Gilduin, the first abbot of that house, whom, upon his death in 1155, he succeeded in that abbacy.

Achard was made bishop of Avranches in 1160, and was highly esteemed by Henry II. of England, though he constantly defended the cause of St Thomas of Canterbury against that prince from the beginning of his persecution in 1164, to his martyrdom in 1170. Achard died in the odour of sanctity in 1171. See F. Gourdan. ib. T. 7.

for the reign of love in his soul. These degrees he otherwise calls seven deserts of the soul. The first is the desert of penance. The second of solitude, at least that of the heart. The third of mortification. The fourth of simplicity of faith. The fifth of obedience. The sixth of the pure love of God. The seventh of zeal for his honour in the salvation of our neighbour. For, a man, first, is to renounce sin by sincere repentance. Secondly, the world by solitude. Thirdly, the flesh by the mortification of his senses. Fourthly, though reason is man's most noble excellency, yet this being obscured and often blinded by the passions, easily becomes the seat of pride, and leads into the most dangerous precipices and errors. Man is therefore bound to humble his reason by keeping it in due subordination, and in a certain degree to renounce it by simplicity of heart and sincere humility. And this is so far from being against reason, that it is the sovereign use of reason. Fifthly, a man is moreover obliged to renounce his own will by perfect obedience. Sixthly, he must moreover renounce all that he is by the pure love of God, which ought to have no bounds. Seventhly, none but one who has tasted the sweetness of heavenly contemplation, knows how incomparable an advantage he renounces who deprives himself of it. Yet zeal for our neighbour's salvation, and tender compassion for his spiritual miseries, move the saints sometimes to prefer toils and sufferings to its pure delight and charms. By these rules we see by what degrees or means pious pastors attain to the apostolic spirit of their state, and how heroic their sacrifice is.

ON THE SAME DAY.

SS. GORDIAN and EPIMACHUS, MM. These two holy martyrs are named in all calendars of the western church since the sixth age. St. Epimachus suffered at Alexandria under Decius, in the year 250, with one Alexander. They had been long detained in a hideous dungeon, were beaten with clubs, their sides were torn with iron-hooks; lastly, they were both burnt in lime. This is related by St Dionysius of Alexandria, quoted by Eusebius (b. vi. c. 41.)

St Gordian was beheaded at Rome for the faith under Julian the Apostate, in the year 362. His name occurs in the ancient martyrologies. His body was laid in a cave, in which was deposited that of St Epimachus, which was brought from Alexandria to Rome a little before St Gordian's martyrdom. The relics of both these martyrs are now possessed by the great Benedictin abbey of Kempton, in the diocese of Aushbourg.

St ISIDORE of Madrid, labourer, patron of Madrid. It is a misfortune which deserves to be lamented with floods of tears, that ignorance, obstinacy, and vice, should so often taint a country life, the state which, of all others, is most necessary and important to the world; the most conformable to a human condition and to nature; the state which was sanctified by the example of the primitive holy patriarchs, and which affords the most favourable opportunities for the perfect practice of every virtue and Christian duty. What advantageous helps to piety did the ancient hermits seek in the deserts, which the circumstances of a country labourer do not offer? The life of St Isidore is a most sensible proof of this assertion. He was born at Madrid, of poor, but very devout parents, and was christened Isidore, from the name of their patron, St Isidore of Seville. They had not the means to procure him learning or a polite education; but both by word and example, they infused into his tender soul the utmost horror and dread of all sin, and the most vehement ardour for every virtue, and especially for prayer. Good books are a great help to holy meditation; but not indispensably requisite. St Irenæus mentions whole nations which believed in Christ, and abounded in exemplary livers, without knowing the use of ink or paper. Many illustrious anchorets knew no other alphabet than that of humility and divine charity. The great St Antony himself could not so much as read the Greek or Latin languages; nay, from the words of St Austin, some doubt whether he could read even his own barbarous Egyptian dialect. Yet in the science of the saints what philosopher or orator ever attained to the A B C of that great man? Learning, if it puffs up the mind, or inspires any secret self-sufficiency, is an impediment to the communications of the Holy Ghost; simplicity and sincere humility being the dispositions which invite him into the soul. By these was Isidore prepared to find him an interior instructor and comforter. His earnestness in seeking lessons and instructions of piety, made him neglect no opportunity of hearing them; and so much the more tender and the deeper were the impressions which they left in his soul, as his desire was the stronger, and the more pure. His patience in bearing all injuries, and in overcoming the envy of fellow servants by cordial kindnesses; his readiness to obey his masters, and in indifferent things to comply with the inclinations of others, and humbly to serve every one, gave him the most complete victory over himself and his passions. Labour he considered as enjoined him by God in punishment of sin, and for a remedy against it. And he performed his work in a spirit of compunction and penance. Many object that their labours and fatigues leave them little time for the exercises of religion. But Isidore, by directing his intention according to the most holy motives of faith, made his work a most perfect act of religion. He considered it as a duty to God. Therefore he applied himself to it with great diligence and care, in imitation of the angels in heaven, who in all things fulfil the will of God with the greatest readiness and alacrity of devotion. The more humbling and the more painful the labour was, the dearer it was to the saint, being a means the more suitable to tame his flesh, and a more noble part of his penance. With the same spirit that the saints subdued their bodies by toils in their deserts, Isidore embraced his task. He moreover sanctified it by continual prayer. Whilst his hand held the plough, he in his heart conversed with God, with his angel-guardian, and the other blessed spirits; sometimes deploring the sins of the world, and his own spiritual miseries; at other times, in the melting words of the royal prophet, raising his desires to the glory of the heavenly Jerusalem. It was chiefly by this perfect spirit of prayer, joined with, or rather engrafted upon, a most profound humility and spirit of mortification, that St Isidore arrived at so eminent a degree of sanctity as rendered him the admiration of all Spain. In his youth he was retained servant by a gentleman named John de Vargas of Madrid, to till his land, and do his husbandry work. The saint afterwards took a most virtuous woman to wife, named Mary Torribia. Those who call her de la Cabeza, were deceived by a chapel to which that name is given, because her head is kept in it. After the birth of one child, which died young, the parents, by mutual consent, served God in perfect continency.

St Isidore continued always in the service of the same master. On account of his fidelity he could say to him, as Jacob did to Laban, (1) that, to guard and improve his stock, he had often watched the nights, and had suffered the scorching heats of summer, and the cold of winter; and that the stock which he found small had been exceedingly increased in his hands. Don John de Vargas, after long experience of the treasure he possessed in this faithful ploughman, treated him as a brother, according to the advice of Ecclesiasticus (2) Let a wise servant be dear to thee as thy own soul: He allowed him the liberty of assisting daily at the public office of the church. On the other side, Isidore was careful, by rising very early, to make his devotions no impediment to his business, nor any incroachment upon what he owed to his master. This being a duty of justice, it would have been a false devotion to have pretended to please God by a neglect of such an obligation; much less did the good servant indulge his compassionate charity to the poor, by relieving them otherwise than out of his own salary. The saint was sensible, that in his fidelity, diligence, and assiduous labour, consisted, in great part, the sanctification of his soul; and that his duty to his master was his duty to

(1) Gen. xxxi. 40. xxx. 30.

(2) Ecclus. vii. 23.

God. He also inspired his wife with the same confidence in God, the same love of the poor, and the same disengagement from the things of this world: he made her the faithful imitatrix of his virtues, and a partner in his good works. She died in 1175, and is honoured in Spain among the saints. Her immemorial veneration was approved by pope Innocent XII. in 1697. See Benedict XIV. de Canoniz. l. 2. c. 24. p. 246.

St Isidore being seized with the sickness of which he died, foretold his last hour, and prepared himself for it with redoubled fervour, and with the most tender devotion, patience, and cheerfulness. The piety with which he received the last sacraments, drew tears from all that were present. Repeating inflamed acts of divine love, he expired on the 15th of May 1170, being near sixty years of age. His death was glorified by miracles. After forty years his body was removed out of the church-yard into the church of St Andrew. It has been since placed in the bishop's chapel, and during these five hundred years remains entire and fresh, being honoured by a succession of frequent miracles down to this time. The following, among others, is very well attested. Philip III, in his return from Lisbon, was taken so ill at Casarubios del Monte, that his life was despaired of by his physicians. Whereupon the shrine of St Isidore was ordered to be carried in a solemn procession of the clergy, court, and people, from Madrid to the chamber of the sick king. The joint prayers of many prevailed. At the same time the shrine was taken out of the church, the fever left the king; and upon its being brought into his chamber, he was perfectly cured. The year following, the body of the saint was put into a new rich shrine, which cost 1600 ducats of gold. St Isidore had been beatified a little before by Paul V. in 1619, at the solicitation of the same king. His solemn canonization was performed, at the request of king Philip IV. on the 12th of March 1622; though the bull was only made public by Benedict XIII. See the life of St Isidore, written by John of Madrid, 140 years after his death; and card. Lambertini, de Canoniz. SS. T. 3.

St COMGALL, Abbot. One of the most illustrious founders of monastic Orders in Ireland. He was born of noble parents in the north of Ulster, in 516, and was brought up under St Fintan, in his monastery of Cluain-Aidhnech, at the foot of the Bladmahills, from whence arise two rivers, the Barrow and Nore in the Queen's County. He came out of that school of piety and monastic discipline an accomplished master, and founded, about the year 550, the great abbey of Benchor or Bangor (a) in the county of Down,

(a) The learned antiquary Sir Roger Twisden tells us, in his Rise of the monastic state, p. 36. that the monks of Bangor were not unlike the Order of St Basil, if not of it. And bishop Tanner takes notice, that the first British and Irish monks imitated very much the rules of the oriental monks. St Comgal founded Bangor in Ireland, as is made evident by Usher, not Bangor in Wales, as Camden mistakes. This latter, whensoever instituted, was a famous abbey in the time of Gildas, who speaks of Monachorum decreta, & monachi v. sum. Bishop Usher informs us, l. de Antiqu. Brit. c. xviii. that four monastic rules are still extant in the old Irish tongue. 1. That of St Columkille which was followed in Scotland, and in the churches planted by the Scottish monks among the northern English Saxons, till St Wilfrid changed it among them. 2. That of St Comgall; but the language in which this rule is writ is no longer intelligible. 3. Of St Mochuda or Carthag, a disciple of St Comgall, and founder of the great monastery of Raithin, in West Meath, and also of another at Lismore, of which city he was the first bishop. He died in 637, and is honoured on the 14th of May. 4. Of St Ailbee, who preaching in Ireland at the same time with St Patrick, was made the first archbishop of Emelye, in Munster; of which province he was a native. That see was afterwards fixed at Cashel. St Ailbee founded a most famous monastery in the isle of Arran, over which he appointed St Enna or Endeus the first abbot. St Ailbe is honoured September 12. The most renowned among the disciples of St Comgall that flourished in Ireland, was St Lugil or Molua, eminent for his obedience and other virtues. St Bernard, who calls him Luanus, writes that he is said to have founded an hundred monasteries. The principal was situate in Leinster on the borders of Munster, between Ossory and Lesia, now Queen's County. It was called Cluain Feartha, or Solitude of Wonders; for Cluain signifies a retired place, and Feartha wonders. St Molua wrote a monastic rule which was very famous, and is said to have been highly approved by St Gregory the Great. He died in 622.

Among the other ancient Irish saints, some of the principal are, two SS. Brendans, both disciples of St Finian at Clonard. One founded the abbey of Birr, in the middle of Ireland, and died in 564, or according which was the most numerous and most celebrated of all monasteries of Ireland ; as that of Bangor in North-Wales, was the most considerable among the Britons, which was in a flourishing condition soon after the death

ording to others, in 572. The other, surnamed the elder, much more famous, the son of Findloga, founded the great monastery of Cluain-Fearta, in Connaught, now called Clonfert, an episcopal see under the archbishop of Tuam. This house was different from that of St Molua in Leinster, called Cluain-Fearta Molua. St Brendan the elder was the author of a monastic rule, and built for his sister Briga a monastery near Tuam, called Inachduin, where he died, in 578. See his life the 16th of May. St Fintan, abbot of Cluain-Aidhnech, in Leinster, was also eminent for his sanctity : by his instructions Comgall was initiated in the practice of Christian perfection. The rule of St Fintan was very austere. The monks lived only on vegetables, and tilled the ground with their own hands. He died in the sixth century. See his life on the 17th Feb. also Bollandus. At the same time flourished St Kenny, in Latin Gannicus, who founded the abbey Achadh-bho, or Field of Oxen, the first seat of the bishops of Ossory ; which see is now fixed at Kilkenny, or Cell of Kenny, so called from this saint. See his life on October 11. also Usher, Ant. c. xvii p. 495. St Finian Lobhar, or the Leper, a disciple of St Brendan, founder of the monasteries of Inis-Fallen, in Desmond, and of Ard-finan, in the county of Tipperary, died about the year 615. See his life on the 16th of March. St Coemgen, alias Keivin, founder of the famous abbey of Glandaloch, which became an episcopal see, now united to Dublin : see his life the 3d of June. St Colman-Elo, founder of the monastery of Land-Elo, now Linnalli, in the King's County, died in 615. See his life the 26th of September. St Kieran, or Queranus, called in Cornwall Piran, was a native of Ossory in Ireland, travelled to Rome, and after his return converted his mother and many other infidels to the faith, thirty years before the arrival of St Patrick, according to bishop Usher, who places his birth in 352 ; and his return from Rome into Ireland in 402. See his life on the 5th of March.

Usher reckons certain other saints in Ireland who are said to have lived a little before the preaching of St Patrick. One St Mel, nephew to St Patrick, and first bishop of Ardachadh, in the county of Longford, and many other saints in Ireland about the time of their conversion to the faith. See Usher, Antiqu. Brit. c. xvi. xvii. and Colgan.

The fervour with which the Irish first embraced the faith, seems not to have abated for several ages. In 674, Marianus Scotus makes this remark in his Chronicle, " that Ireland was filled with saints or holy men." Nor was the reputation of its schools less renowned. Two Irishmen coming into France in 701, were there admired for their incomparable learning, and gave birth to the two first universities in the world, namely those of Paris and Pavia : and our great king Alfred in of St Dubritus, about the middle of the 6th century. Camden is mistaken when he writes that St Comgall first instituted monks in Ireland; it being certain that St Patrick himself had founded monasteries there, having perhaps learned the monastic rule of St Martin in France. But St Comgall exceedingly propagated that state in Ireland. He is said to have governed in Behchor and other houses 3000 monks; all which religious 891, listened to three learned Irishmen in his projects for the advancement of literature. (See Usher, p. 544, 545.) Camden observes (Brit. de Hibern. p. 730.) that the English Saxons anciently flocked to Ireland as to the mart of sacred learning, and that this is frequently mentioned in the lives of eminent men among them. Thus, in the life of Sulgenus, in the eighth age, we read :

*Exemplo Patrum, commotus amore legendi,
Ivit ad Hibernos, sophia mirabile claros.*

With love of learning and examples fir'd,
To Ireland, fam'd for wisdom, he retir'd.

Camden conjectures that the English-Saxons borrowed their letters from the Irish, because they used the same which the Irish at this day still make use of in writing their own language.

The monks who applied themselves to prayer, preaching and teaching in Ireland and Scotland, in the middle ages, were called Culdees, i. e. servants of God, from the Latin words, Cultores Dei. No mention is made of them by Nennius in the seventh, nor by Bede in the eighth age. They seem not to have been known before the ninth century, in which we find them at St Andrew's: though Hector Boetius and other Scottish writers pretend the Culdees to have been as ancient as Christianity in that country. They seem to have never had any settlement in England except at St Peter's in York. Their rule was borrowed from that of St Basil. See Usher's Antiqu. Eccl. Brit. fol. 333, 334. 346: 638. 659. Collier, Eccl. Hist. vol. 1. p. 180, and Tanner's preface to Notitia Monast.

In the latter ages the Benedictine and other religious Orders had many houses and provinces in Ireland: but the regular canons of St Austin were far the most flourishing, as the Benedictines were in England. The bishops and parsons of Ireland were mostly taken out of their body. In Dublin, though the church of St Patrick was the richest and the principal cathedral, that of the Holy Trinity, belonging to a great abbey of regular canons, enjoyed also the pre-eminence of a cathedral. Its abbot sat in the house of lords: as did also the prior of All-Saints in the same city: and certain other abbots and priors in other parts of the island. See Alemand's French monastic history of Ireland: or that in English, though both very imperfect and often inaccurate. The principal among the ancient monasteries of Ireland are mentioned by Sir James Ware.

men were employed in tillage or other manual labour. Columban, who was his disciple at Benchor, settled his rule in Britain, France and Italy; and many other abbots, bishops and saints, came out of his nursery. All the holy men of that age sought his friendship and acquaintance, and the ancient writers highly extol his sanctity and prudence. Notker says, he was, in an extraordinary manner, the heir of the virtues and merits of St Columba or Columkille. Jonas, in the life of St Columban, and St Bernard in that of St Malachi, are very profuse in his commendations. The latter says, that the monastery of Benchor having been long before destroyed by pirates, St Malachi restored it, because the bodies of many Sts reposed there. Usher thinks St Comgall to have been the same with St Congellus. Seven years after he had founded Benchor, he went to Wales, and there built a monastery in a place then called the land of Heth. On his return to Ireland he founded another monastery called Cell-Comgail, now Saynkille, at present annexed to the archbishopric of Dublin. He died on the 10th of May, in 601. (b) See Usher, Ant. Brit. Eccl. p. 236, 237. 452, 472, 473. 475. 476. 494. Also the Chronicles of Inisfallan and Kilkenny, quoted by Colgan in MSS.

St CATALDUS, Bishop of Tarentum in Italy. He was a learned Irish monk who was for some time regent of the great school of Lismore soon after the death of its founder St Carthag. To this nursery of learning and virtue prodigious numbers flocked both from the neighbouring and remote countries. St Cataldus at length resigned his charge in quest of some closer retirement, and travelled to Jerusalem; and in his return into Italy, was chosen bishop of Tarentum, not in the 6th century, as some Italian writers have imagined, much less in the second, but in the decline of the seventh. He is titular saint of the cathedral, the only parish-church of the city, though it is said to con-

(b) The Irish annals of the Four Masters place the death of St Comgall in 600; having (they say) died in the 90th year of his age, and governed the abbacy of Benchor 50 years, 3 months, and 10 days;

tain 18,000 inhabitants. St Cataldus is counted the second bishop. Colgan gives an epitaph placed under an image of St Cataldus at Rome, which declares his birth, travels and death, as follows :

Me tulit Hiberne, Solymæ traxere, Tarentum Nunc tenet : huic ritus, dogmata, jure, dædi.

Which are thus englished by Harris, in his edition of Ware's Irish bishops.

Hibernia gave me birth : thence wafted o'er,
I sought the sacred Solymeane shore.
To thee, Tarentum, holy rites I gave,
Precepts divine ; and thou to me a grave.

See his life written by three Italians, Bartholomew Moronos, Alexander ab Alexandro, and Antony Caraccioli : see also Colgan, T. I. p. 656. and MSS. ad 10 Majj ; and Harris's Ware, p. 549.

MAY XI.

ST MAMMERTUS, ARCHBISHOP OF VIENNE, CONFESSOR.

From a homily of St Avitus, his disciple, on the institution of the Rogation days, T. 2. Op. Sirmond, p. 136. and from St Sidonius Appollinaris, l. 7. ep. 1. p. 1014. l. 5. ep. 14. See Ceillier, T. 15. p. 23. Rivet, Hist. Liter. Fr. T. 2. p. 480.

A. D. 477.

ST MAMMERTUS, Archbishop of Vienne in Dauphinè, in which see he succeeded Simplicius in the 5th age, was a prelate renowned in the church for his sanctity, learning and miracles. He instituted in his diocese the fasts and supplications called the Rogations, on the following occasion (1). Almighty God, to punish the sins of the people, visited them with wars and other public calamities, and awaked them from their spiritual lethargy by the terrors of earthquakes, fires and ravenous wild beasts, which last were sometimes seen in the very market-places of cities ; such was the desolate state to which the country was reduced. These evils the impious ascribed to blind chance : but religious and prudent persons considered them as tokens of the divine anger, which threatened them with entire destruction, unless they strove effectually to avert it by sincere repentance. Amidst these scourges St Mammertus received a token of the divine mercy. A terrible fire happened in the city of Vienne, which baffled the efforts of men : but by the prayers of the good bishop the fire on a sudden went out. This miracle strongly affected the minds of the people. The holy prelate took this opportunity to make them sensible of the necessity and efficacy of devout prayer, and to improve their salutary dispositions to sincere compunction and penance, and a thorough amendment of life. On Easter-night a second great fire happened which alarmed the city more than ever. The zealous pastor had recourse to his usual arms, and poured forth his prayers with many tears, lying prostrate before the altar till the flames were extinguished in a manner which his successor St Avitus calls miraculous (2). During this second conflagration, the archbishop formed a pious design of instituting an annual fast and supplication of three days, in which all the faithful should join; with sincere compunction of heart, to appease the divine indignation by fasting, prayer, tears, and the confession of sins. The church of Auvergne, of which St Sidonius was bishop, adopted this pious institution before the year 475, as appears by the letter of St Sidonius quoted above; and it became in a very short time an universal practice. We have two sermons of St Mammertus, one on the Rogations, the other on the repentance of the Ninivites, being the 24th and 25th among the discourses which bear the name of Eusebius of Emisa. It is clear, from the homily of St Avitus On the Rogations, that St Mammertus regulated the psalms to be sung, and the rite to be observed on the three Rogation days. The ancient mass and lessons appointed for them in Gaul, are found in the ancient Gallican liturgy published by Mabillon. St Mammer-

(1) Sidon. Apollin. l. 7. ep. p. 1014.

(2) Hom. de Rogat. p. 136.

tus's younger brother Mammertus Claudian, who is celebrated by St Sidonius Apollinatis as the greatest scholar of his age, but was much more commendable for his modesty and virtue, being a priest, governed the affairs of his diocese under him. He was author of the hymn, Pange lingua gloriosi prælium certaminis (a), and other elegant works (b). He died about the year 474. Our saint survived him three years, dying in 477, and is commemorated in the Roman martyrology.

Under temporal afflictions we are to remember that God chastises us in this life only in mercy: by these visits he desires to cure the disorderly attachments of our souls, and to compel us to acknowledge that he is our only salvation, comfort and strength, and to seek him with our whole hearts. To neglect human precautions and remedies against temporal evils, would be to tempt God: but so to rely on the means of human prudence as not to have recourse to God by earnest prayer, is to refuse to acknowledge our dependence upon him, and to deprive ourselves of his blessing, which alone can give success even to natural means. St Mammertus shews that prayer on these occasions must be accompanied with compunction, penance, and alms-deeds. We must begin to implore the divine mercy by renouncing sin as the greatest of evils, the cause of all the chastisements which are inflicted on us, and an evil of an order infinitely superior to all other calamities, insomuch that it is really the only evil we ought truly to fear. Can we hope that God will hear our prayers, if we only ask of him what will entertain in us the kingdom of the devil; not his grace, but the things of this world, and the objects of our irregular passions? Such petitions are not prayers, but inordinate desires. Have we not reason to fear that ours are often such, if we cry to

(a) It has been by some falsely ascribed to Venantius Fortunatus.

(b) Bibl. Patr. Lugd. T. 6. p. 1062. His principal work is that in three books, On nature and the soul, against Faustus of Riez, who had asserted that God alone is incorporeal, and that angels and human souls are material. Mammertus confutes his error, and treats that obscure question in a methodical and elegant manner.

God with tears when any temporal calamity threatens us ; but are insensible to the miseries of our souls, and cold and remiss under spiritual dangers? If we seek first the kingdom of God, and its justice, all other things will be given to us.

ON THE SAME DAY.

St MAIEUL, in Latin MAJOLUS, Abbot of Cluni, C. Avignon, where this great personage was born of a very rich and illustrious family about the year 906, being exposed to the incursions of the Saracens, Maieul, after the death of his parents, retired to Macon, to a nobleman who was his relation. There he received the tonsure, and Bernon, the bishop, gave him a canonry in his cathedral, in hopes of fixing him in his diocese. Antony, abbot of L'isle Barbe, at that time taught philosophy with great reputation at Lyons. Maieul went thither ; but whilst he pursued his studies he dedicated a considerable part of his time every day to his devotions, and though by his progress in learning he raised the admiration of all who knew him, it was principally in the school of virtue that he every day outdid himself. His higher studies he completed at Macon, and was when yet young raised to the dignity of archdeacon. The archiepiscopal see of Besançon soon after falling vacant, the prince, clergy and people, unanimously chose Maieul to fill it. To escape this danger he fled to Cluni, and there made his monastic profession about the year 942. The abbot Aimard appointed him library-keeper and Apocrisarius ; to the first of which charges was annexed the care of the studies, to the second that of the treasury, and of all important affairs out of the monastery. As St Berno, the first abbot of Cluni, had chosen St Odo his coadjutor, and St Odo Aimard, so Aimard in 948 raised St Maieul to the dignity of joint abbot with him, though he survived to the year 965. His extraordinary merit and virtue gained him the respect and esteem of all the princes of that age. The emperor Otho the Great placed an entire confidence in him, and gave him the superintendency over all the monasteries in his dominions. The empress St Alice and her son Otho II. had no less regard for him : and by him, when they were at variance, a happy reconciliation was effected. They conspired to have him raised to the popedom ; but could by no means overcome his opposition. To all that could be urged, he replied : " He knew how far he was from being possessed of the essential qualifications for that exalted station : also how opposite his manners were to those of the Romans." St Maieul was very learned, and a great encourager of all useful studies. Three years before his death he appointed St Odilo his coadjutor in 991, not in 998, as D'Acheri who published the act of his election imagined. It is signed by S. Maieul, by Rodolph king of Burgundy, several archbishops, bishops, secular lords and 177 monks. From that time the saint gave himself up entirely to the exercises of penance and contemplation. He could not, however, decline, at the earnest request of Hugh Capet, king of France, to undertake a journey to settle a reformation in the abbey of St Denys near Paris. He fell sick on the road at the monastery of Souvigni, two leagues from Moulins, and there died on the 11th of May in 994. His remains were buried there in the church of St Peter ; king Hugh honoured the ceremony with his presence, and enriched his tomb with many presents. An altar was erected there soon after, according to the manner of canonizing saints in those days. He is named in the Roman martyrology on this day. His life is written by Syrus, a monk of Cluni, who dedicated this work to St Odilo. It is given genuine by Mabillon, Actor. Bened. T. 7. Aldebold, a monk of the same house, added a preface and some trifling digressions, whilst St Odilo was still abbot. Two short lives of this saint were compiled soon after, which see in the continuators of Bollandus with ancient relations of miracles wrought at his tomb. See Biblioth. Cluniac. p. 620. Hist. Liter. de la France, T. 6. p. 498. & T. 7. p. 409.

MAY XII.

SS. NEREUS AND ACHILLEUS, MM.

THEY were eunuchs or chamberlains belonging to St Flavia Domitilla, zealous Christians, and with her were banished by Domitian into a little isle on the coast of Terracina, called Pontia. Their acts say that they were afterwards beheaded at Terracina under Trajan. Their festival was kept at Rome with great solemnity in the sixth age, when St Gregory the Great spoke on it his 28th homily, in which he says: "These saints before whose tomb we are assembled, despised the world, and trampled it under their feet, when peace, plenty, riches and health, gave it charms." Their old church in Rome lay in ruins, when Baronius, to whom it gave the title of cardinal, rebuilt it with splendor, and restored to it their relicks, which had been removed to the chapel of St Adrian.

ST FLAVIA DOMITILLA, V. M.

SHE was niece to the consul and martyr St Flavius Clemens, being the daughter of his sister, as Eusebius testifies (1); consequently she was little niece of the emperor Domitian, who, having put to death her illustrious uncle, banished her for her faith into Pontia. There she lived with her holy eunuchs Nereus and Achilleus, in exercises of devotion; they all dwelling in separate cells, which remained standing 300 years after. St Jerom tells us, that St Paula, going from Rome to Jerusalem, took this island in her way, visited them with respect and devotion, and by the sight of them was animated with fervour. That father calls her banishment a long martyrdom. Nerva and Trajan were perhaps unwilling to restore the relations of Domitian with the other exiles whom they recalled. The acts of SS. Nereus and Achilleus say, that she returned to Terracina, and was there burnt under Trajan, because she refused to sacrifice to idols. Her relicks are kept together with those of SS. Nereus and Achilleus; who, though her servants here on earth, enjoy an equal honour and condition with her in glory (a).

(1) B. 3. c. 18.

This royal virgin found true happiness and joy in suffering for virtue, whilst worldly pomp and honours are only masks which often cover the basest slavery and much inward bitterness. Sinners, who seem the most fortunate in the eyes of the world, feel in their own breasts frequent returns of fear, anxiety and remorse. They are only enemies to solitude and retirement, and to all serious and calm reflection, because they cannot bear to look into themselves, and tremble at the very sight of their own frightful wounds. To turn their eyes from themselves they study to drown their faculties in an hurry of disipation, business or diversion. Nay, though nauseated and tired with a dull and tasteless repetition of follies, they choose to repeat them still for fear of being left alone, at liberty to think of themselves. But what becomes of them when sickness, disasters, or a wakeful hour, forces them to take a view of their own miserable state, and the dangers which hang over them? Their gaudy shew of happiness is merely exterior, and only imposes upon others: but their pangs and agonies are interior: these they themselves feel. The servant of God who, in his sweet love enjoys an inward peace and comfort which the whole world cannot rob him off, carries his paradise within his own breast, whatever storms hover about him.

(a) The elder Flavia Domitilla was niece to the emperor Domitian, and daughter of his sister Domitilla. This sister he had given in marriage to his cousin-german St Flavius Clemens, son to a brother of Vespasian. After his martyrdom, she was impeached for her faith; and, because she refused to marry another husband, banished to the isle Pannataria, now St Mary's, near Puzzuolo. She probably returned to Rome, or at least to the continent; after the death of Domitian. She had by St Clemens two sons, Vespasian and Domitian, whom that emperor destined to be his successors, and appointed the celebrated rhetorician Quintilian to be their preceptor. This virtuous lady was aunt to St Domitilla, V. M. See Tillemont, Hist. Emp.

ST PANCRAS, M.

HE is said to have suffered at Rome, in the 14th year of his age. Having been beheaded for the faith, which he had gloriously confessed under Dioclesian in the year 304, he was interred in the cemetery of Calpodius, which afterwards took his name. His old church in that place was repaired in the 5th century by pope Symmachus, and in the 7th by pope Honorius I. St Gregory the Great speaks of his relicks. St Gregory of Tours (1) calls him the Avenger of perjuries, and says that God by a perpetual miracle visibly punished false oaths made before his relicks. Pope Vitalian sent a portion of them to king Oswi in 656 (2). Italy, England, France, Spain, &c. abound with churches which bear his name. (3) See D. Jenichen, Diss. de S. Pancratio, urbis et ecclesiæ primariæ Giessensis patrono titulari, in 4to. Anno 1758, at Giessen, an university in Upper Hesse, belonging to the landgrave of Hesse Darmstadt.

 ST EPIPHANIUS, ARCHBISHOP OF SALAMIS, CONFESSOR.

From his works, Socrates, Sozomen, and St Jerom. See Tillemont, T. 9. Ceillier, T. 8. and La Vie de S. Epiphane avec l'analyse des Ouvrages de ce Saint, & son Apologie, in 4to. Paris, 1738, by M. Gervaise, formerly abbot of La Trappe.

A. D. 403.

ST EPIPHANIUS was born about the year 310, in the territory of Eleutheropolis, in Palestine. To qualify himself for the study of the holy scriptures, he learned in his youth the Hebrew, the Egyptian, the Syriac, the Greek, and the Latin languages. His frequent conversation with St Hilarion and other holy anchorets, whom he often visited to receive their instructions, gave him a strong inclination to a monastic life, which he embraced very young. If he made his first essay in Palestine, as M Gervaise is persuaded upon the authority of the saint's Greek life attributed by many to Metaphrastes; at least it is certain he went

(1) L. 1. de glor. Mart. c. 39.

(2) Bede, Hist. b. 3. c. 29.

(3) Henschenius, T. 3. Maij. p. 18.

soon into Egypt to perfect himself in the exercises of that state in the deserts of that country. He returned into Palestine about the year 333, and built a monastery near the place of his birth. His labours in the exercise of virtue seemed to some to surpass his strength: but his apology always was: "God gives not the kingdom of heaven but on the condition that we labour: and all we can do bears no proportion to such a crown." To his corporal austerities he added an indefatigable application to prayer and study. (a)

(a) He wrote his Ancorate to be as it were an anchor or stay to fix unsettled minds in the true faith, that they might not be tossed to and fro, and carried about by every wind of doctrine, which is always the case of heresy. In this work he explains, and proves in short the principal articles of the Catholic faith. But his great work appeared in 374, under the title of Panarium; or, Box of Antidotes against all heresies. He gives the history of twenty heresies before Christ, and of fourscore since the promulgation of the Gospel. If in his account of Arianism he sometimes falls into historical mistakes, we must remember how difficult it often is to discover the truth, in points wherein so many factions find it their interest to adulterate it. These heresies he confutes both by the scripture and tradition. "Tradition, says he, is also necessary. All things cannot be learned from the scriptures, therefore the apostles left some things in writing, others by tradition, which Paul affirms, saying; As I have delivered to you, &c. (Hær. 60. c. 6. p. 511.) By the latter he justifies the practice, and proves the obligation of praying for the dead. (Hær. 76. c. 7. 8. p. 911.) He admires how Aerius could presume to abolish the fasts of Wednesdays and Fridays, "which are observed by the whole earth, and that by apostolical authority." (ib. Hær. 76.) "The style of this work, says Godeau, (Éloges des Eveques illustres, c. 37. p. 28.) is not much polished; but the doctrine is pure and excellent. They are diamonds which, without being cut, sparkle by their natural beauty. We are much indebted to the author for the distinct knowledge he has given us of the ancient heresies, and the solid confutation he has left us of them. These it is true are no longer known to us but by their names: but others take their place, and are a continual trial: and the spirit of heresy is always, like itself, full of obstinacy, self-conceit and pride." S Epiphanius's book on Weights and Measures, explains the measures and ancient customs of the Jews; that on Precious Stones, is an enquiry concerning the rational or square ornament worn by the Jewish high-priest, and the qualities of the twelve precious stones set in it. In his letter to John of Jerusalem (inter op S. Hieron.) he relates how he saw at Anablatha, in the diocese of Jerusalem, a curtain over the church door, on which was painted an image, whether of Christ or of some saint he had forgot when he wrote this; but he tore the curtain or hanging, and gave others in its place. It is certain, from the famous statue of the woman cured by our Saviour of the bloody flux, which stood

at

Most books then in vogue passed through his hands; and he improved himself very much in learning, by his travels into many parts. The great St Hilarion had spent twenty-two years in the desert when God made him known to the world by the lustre of his virtues and an extraordinary gift of miracles; about the year 328. St Epiphanius, though the skilful director of many others, regarded him as his master in a spiritual life, and enjoyed the happiness of his direction and intimate acquaintance, from the year 333 to 356, in which Tillemont, who seems to have settled most correctly the chronology of St Hilarion's life, places the departure of that great saint out of Palestine. St Jerom gives us to understand in his life, that never was union of two friends more intimate or more constant, which even this separation was not able to interrupt. The church of Salamis seems to have been determined by St Hilarion to demand Epiphanius for their bishop, and this latter consecrated his pen after the death of St Hilarion to make known his virtue to the world. In the dreadful persecution which the Arians raised against the Catholics in the reign of Constantius, St Epiphanius often left his cell to comfort and encourage the latter; and his zeal obliged him to separate himself from the communion of his diocesan Euty chius bishop of Eleutheropolis, who against his own conscience, out of human political motives, entered into a confederation with Acacius and other heretics against the truth. (1) In reading the works of Origen he was shocked at many errors which he discovered in them, and began early in his life to precaution the faithful against the same. (2) at Paneas in that very country, mentioned by Eusebius as honoured with miracles; and from the writings of St Prudentius, St Paulinus, St Ephrem. &c. that the use of holy images was common in the church at that very time, as Le Clerc in their lives acknowledges. But St Epiphanius here discovered, or at least apprehended, some superstitious practice or danger of it among converts from idolatry; or, of scandal to Jewish proselytes; for, upon this last consideration, it might sometimes seem prudent to forbear a practice of discipline in certain places, as Salmeron observes in 1 Joan. c. 5. disp. 32.

(1) S. Epiph. hæ. 73. c. 23. 27. (2) S. Jerom, l. 2. in Rufin. c. 6. & ep. 60. S. Epiph. hæ. 64.

St Epiphanius in his monastery was the oracle of Palestine and the neighbouring countries; and no one ever went from him who had not received great spiritual comfort by his holy advice. The reputation of his virtue made him known to distant countries; and about the year 367, he was chosen bishop of Salamis, then called Constantia, in Cyprus. But he still wore the monastic habit, and continued to govern his monastery in Palestine, which he visited from time to time. He sometimes relaxed his austerities in favour of hospitality, preferring charity to abstinence. No one surpassed him in tenderness and charity to the poor. Many pious persons made him the dispenser of their large alms. St Olympias, to have a share in his benediction, made him great presents in money and lands for that purpose. The veneration which all men had for his sanctity, exempted him from the persecucion of the Arian emperor Valens in 371; but he was almost the only catholic bishop in that part of the empire, who was entirely spared on that occasion. In 376, he undertook a journey to Antioch to endeavour the conversion of Vitalis the Apollinarist bishop; and in 382, he accompanied St Paulinus from that city to Rome, where they lodged at the house of St Paula; our saint in return entertained her afterwards ten days in Cyprus in 385. The saint fell into some mistakes on certain occasions, which proceeded from zeal and simplicity, as Socrates observes. The very name of an error in faith, or the shadow of danger of evil, affrighted him. At Jerusalem in 394, he preached against Origenism in presence of the patriarch John, whom he suspected to lean towards that heresy. At Bethlehem he persuaded St Jerom to separate himself from his communion, unless he publicly purged himself. He also ordained by compulsion Paulinian, the brother of St Jerom, priest: but, upon the complaint of John, carried him into Cyprus to serve his church at Salamis. At Constantinople he impeached the tall brothers for Origenism, having been prepossessed against them by the clamours of Theophilus. He even blamed St Chrysostom for affording them his protection: but a mild expostulation of that saint opened his eyes, and he hastened back to Salamis, but died on the voyage thither in 403, having been bishop thirty-six years. His disciples built a church in his honour in Cyprus, where they placed his, and many other pious pictures (Conc. T. 7. p. 447.) Sozomen testifies that God honoured his tomb with miracles (b. 7. ch. 27.) St Austin, St Ephrem, St John Damascen, Photius and others called him a catholic doctor, an admirable man, and one filled with the spirit of God. (b)

ON THE SAME DAY.

St GERMANUS, Patriarch of Constantinople. He was the son of a famous senator named Justinian. From his youth he shone as a bright light among the clergy, and was chosen bishop of Cyzicus, and, in 715, patriarch of Constantinople. In the most degenerate times he kept virtue in countenance, and vice in awe, and strenuously defended the faith with equal zeal, learning and prudence, first again the Monothelites, and afterwards against the Iconoclasts. When Leo the Isaurian commanded by an edict all holy images to be abolished, in 725, the patriarch refused to take them out of the churches; and boldly maintained, even before the emperor himself, the honour which the church taught to be due to them; in which he was seconded by St John Damascen, who then lived in the court of the caliph of the Saracens. St Germanus put the emperor in mind of what he had promised at his coronation, and how he took God to witness that he would not alter any of the traditions of the church. The emperor, after he found that he could not gain the patriarch by flattering words, endeavoured to pro-

(b) His works are published by the learned Petavius, in two vols. folio; but the original Greek must be consulted by those who desire to avoid all mistakes, as the judicious prelate Alvaspinæus, or Aubespine, has taken much pains to convince the world with regard to that translation. The commentary of St Epiphanius on the book of Canticles was lately discovered among the manuscripts of the Vatican library, by Monsignor Foggini, prefect of that library, who has favoured us with an accurate edition of the same at Rome, in 1750, with a learned preface.

voke him to let fall some injurious expression, that he might be accused as a seditious person. But the saint was too well instructed in the school of Christ to forget the rules of meekness and patience. The emperor grew every day more outrageous against him, accusing the emperors his predecessors, and all the bishops and Christians of idolatry; for he was too ignorant to distinguish between a relative and an absolute worship. After much ill usage, the patriarch was unjustly compelled by the heretics, in 730, to leave his church when he had governed it 14 years, five months. He employed the leisure which his banishment procured him at Platanium, his paternal house, in weeping for the evils of the church, and in preparing himself, by the most fervent exercises of penance and devotion, for eternity, which he happily entered on the 12th of May 733. The elegance and politeness of his writings, especially of his apology for St Gregory of Nyssa against the Origenists, (a) are admired by Photius, (1) See Theophanes and St Nicephorus. The saints in all ages have found trials. Heaven is not to be obtained but upon this condition. The expectation of its glory made them embrace their crosses with joy. With St Chrysostom (2) they often repeated: "If I were to die a thousand times a day, nay, for some time to suffer hell itself, that I may behold Christ in his glory, all would be too little."

St RICTRUDES, Abbess. This mother of saints was a lady of the first quality in France, born in Gascony in 614, and married to Adalbald, one of the principal lords of the court of king Clovis. She had by him four children, who, copying after her example, being happily educated in her maxims of perfect piety, deserved all to be honoured among the saints: namely St Mauront, abbot of Breuil, St Clotsenda, abbess of Marchiennes, St Eusebia, or Isoye, abbess of Hamay, and St Adalsenda, a nun at Hamay. So

(1) Cod. 233. See Fleury, l. 42. n. 55. (2) St Chrys. ad Theodor. laps. l. 1. p. 17.

(a) The loss of this work is extremely to be regretted.

great a benediction does the sanctity of parents draw upon a whole family. St Amand being banished into the southern parts of France, Rictrudes finding him to be truly a man of God, committed herself entirely to his direction, to walk with fervour in the paths of evangelical perfection. The death of her husband, who was assassinated in his return from his estates in Flanders, not only set her at liberty, but was a powerful means to wean her heart perfectly from the world. Thus the most grievous temporal affliction proved her greatest spiritual blessing. She was yet young, and exceeding rich; and king Clovis II. sought even by threats to oblige her to marry one of his favourite courtiers. However, she maintained her ground, and at length was permitted to receive the religious veil from the hands of St Amand. She had before this founded an abbey of monks on a marshy ground in her estate of Marchiennes, under the direction of St Amand. Being now a widow, she built a separate monastery for nuns in the same place, which she governed herself forty years. She was clad with rough hair-cloth, and fasted, watched, and prayed, almost without intermission. She sighed continually after the goods of the heavenly Jerusalem; for, as St Bernard says: (1) "Thou desirest not sufficiently the joys to come, if thou dost not daily ask them with tears. Thou knowest them not, if thy soul doth not refuse all comfort till they come." When the film with which the love of the world covers the eye of the soul, is removed by a perfect disengagement of the heart from its toys, then she sees and feels the weight of her distance from her God. And till she can be drowned in the ocean of his love, she finds no other comfort in her banishment but in the contemplation of his goodness, and in sighs excited by his love. Rictrudes, that she might more freely pursue these exercises, which were the delight of her heart, resigned her superiority some time before her happy death, which happened on the 12th of May 688, she being seventy-four years old. This nunnery was abolished, and its revenues given to the monks in the same place, in 1028. The body of

(1) Serm. 2. in cap. Jejun n. 4.

St Rictrudes is honourably entombed in the church of that great Benedictin abbey. Her name is inserted in many monastic and local calendars, and several churches and altars have been formerly erected in Flanders under her invocation, mentioned by Papebroke. In the church of St Amatus at Douay in the Chapel of St Mauront, among the statues of the saints of his family the third is of St Rictrudes. Her life was compiled by Hucbald, a learned monk of St Amand's, in 907. Surius altered the style; but this is restored to its original integrity by Mabillon (Act. Bened. T. 2. p. 938) and Papebroke the Bollandist, who has enhanced the value of this work by judicious remarks (T. 3. Maij. p. 80.) and has added several long histories of her miracles, compiled by several monks of St Marchiennes and St Amand's in different ages.

M A Y XIII.

ST JOHN THE SILENT, B. C.

From his excellent life written by Cyril the monk, his disciple, a little before the death of the saint. See Godeau, Eloges des Eveques Illustres, § 56. p. 330.

A. D. 559

JOHN had his surname given him from his love of silence and recollection. He was born at Nicopolis in Armenia, in the year 454. His descent, by both parents, was from the most illustrious generals and governors of that part of the empire; but he derived from their virtue a much more illustrious nobility than that of their pedigree. They were solicitous above all things to give their son the most holy education. After their death, he, with part of his estate, built at Nicopolis a church in honour of the Blessed Virgin, as also a monastery, in which, with ten fervent companions, he shut himself up when only eighteen years of age, with a view of making the salvation and most perfect sanctification of his soul his only and earnest pursuit; directing to this end all his thoughts and endeavours. As humility is the foundation and guardian of all virtue, this he laboured in the first place to obtain. Accordingly, he made it his earnest petition to God; and, by assiduous meditation on his own nothingness, his absolute insufficiency, numberless miseries and baseness, and on the infinite majesty and adorable perfections of God, he studied to know God and himself. He learned sincerely to look upon all manner of humiliations as his due, and to receive them with joy from whatever quarter they were sent; and cheerfully to exercise himself in those which appeared most repugnant to flesh and blood, and most proper to beat down all secret sentiments of pride. To kill the seeds of all other vices, he practised the most constant and severe denial of his own will, and he added corporal austerities to subdue his flesh, and to fit his soul for the spiritual functions of contemplation and prayer. Not only to shun the danger of sin by the tongue, but also out of a sense of sincere humility and contempt of himself, and the love of interior recollection and prayer, he very seldom spoke; and if necessity obliged him to open his mouth, it was always in very few words, and with great discretion. He banished sloth out of his little community as a fruitful source of vice, and the poison of all virtue. Some humbling, painful and useful labour filled up, in his house, all the intervals of time which public prayer, and other necessary duties left vacant. His mildness, prudence and piety, won him the esteem and affection of all his brethren, who strove in every virtue to be the copies of their holy abbot. But, to his extreme affliction, when he was only twenty-eight years old, the archbishop of Sebaste obliged him to quit his retreat, and ordained him bishop of Colonia in Armenia, in 482.

In this dignity John preserved always the same spirit, and, as much as was compatible with the duties of his charge, continued his monastic austerities and exercises. His brother and nephew, who enjoyed honourable places in the emperor's palace, were moved by his example to contemn the world in the very midst of its honours; and the same grace which sanctifies anchorets in their deserts, made them saints in the court. But he found not the same comfort in a brother-in-law who was governor of Armenia, against whose oppressions of his church the saint was obliged to have recourse to the emperor Zeno, and readily obtained his protection. St John had fulfilled all the duties of an holy bishop nine years, practising all the austerities of his former life, and refusing to allow himself even the necessary conveniences of life, that he might bestow all he possessed on the poor. He instructed his flock by preaching, and by his example in-duced them to practise what he taught. He was comforter of all that were in affliction, and bore their burdens with them ; and he never ceased to instil sentiments of humility, moderation and compunction, into the hearts of those who lived in the more dangerous flattering state of worldly prosperity. He was the father of all, and carried them all in his heart, that he might plant in them the spirit, and transfer them into the heart of Christ. Certain evils, which he found it impossible for him to remedy, joined with his strong inclination to a retired life, gave him an earnest desire to resign his charge. By the rule of the church and his sacred engagement, he was bound not to abandon the spouse to which he was tied, or to leave exposed to wolves a flock which the Supreme Pastor had entrusted to his care. But the divine grace sometimes makes exceptions in order to raise a soul to an extraordinary sanctity. John had reason at first to look upon the thought of such a project as suspected, to examine it impartially, and to consult God for a considerable time by earnest prayer. The author of his life assures us, that whilst he was watching one night in prayer, he saw before him a bright cross formed in the air, and heard a voice which said to him : " If thou desirest to be saved, follow this light." He then seemed to see it move before him, and at length point out to the Laura of St Sabas. Being satisfied what the sacrifice was which God required at his hands, he found means to abdicate the episcopal charge, and embarked on a vessel bound for Palestine. He went first to Jerusalem, and having there performed his devotions, retired to the neighbouring Laura of St Sabbas which at that time contained one hundred and fifty fervent monks, all animated with the spirit of their holy founder and superior. St John was then thirty-eight years old. St Sabas first placed him under the steward of the Laura, to fetch water, carry stones, and serve the workmen in building a new hospital, John went and came like a beast of burden, continuing always recollected in God, always chearful and silent. After this trial the experienced superior appointed him to receive and entertain strangers. The blessed man served every one, as if he had served Christ himself, whom he considered in his members; and all persons were exceedingly edified with his humility and devotion. St Sabas observed every step, and admired to see the behaviour of this young monk in an employment which is often dangerous to the monastic spirit, even in those that are most advanced. For the dissipation of such an attendance seemed no way to interrupt his attention to God, or abate his spirit of recollection. St Sabas by this time clearly perceived that his novice was already a masterly proficient in the monastic profession, and eminently endowed with the spirit of his vocation. Therefore, to afford him opportunities of the greatest spiritual progress by uninterrupted contemplation, he allowed him a separate hermitage; which was his method only with regard to the more perfect. During five days in the week, which he passed without taking any nourishment, John never left his cell: but on Saturdays and Sundays he attended the public worship of God in the church. After passing three years in this eremitical life, he was made steward of the Laura. His virtue drew a blessing on the community; neither was this employment any distraction to his mind. Such indeed was his love of God, that his soul stood in need of no effort to think continually on him. Such a habit is not to be attempted at once. Too strained an attention might hurt the head, as experience has sometimes shewn. This practice; and a constant attention to the divine presence, is to be acquired at first by frequent ejaculations to God during exterior actions, repeated at intervals; either such as naturally occur to the devout mind, or select ones of divine praise, compunction, love, &c. such as are contained in the petitions of the Lord's Prayer, the Psalms, or other parts of the inspired writings. By this method such a practice in John grew habitual, and by daily use became more perfect and familiar.

Our saint had discharged this last office four years, when St Sabas, judging him worthy to be promoted to the priesthood, presented him to the patriarch Elias. When they came to the church of mount Calvary, where the ordination was to be performed, St John said to the patriarch: "Holy father, I have something to impart to you in private: after which, if you judge me worthy, I will receive holy Orders." The patriarch took him aside, and John, having obtained from him a promise of secrecy, said: "Father, I have been ordained bishop; but on account of the multitude of my sins have fled, and am come into this desert to wait the visit of the Lord." The patriarch was startled, and calling in St Sabas said to him: "I desire to be excused from ordaining this man, on account of some particulars he has discovered to me." St Sabas went back much afflicted, fearing lest John had been formerly guilty of some grievous crime. Under this uncertainty God revealed to him, at his request, the state of the affair. Whereupon, calling for John, he complained to him of his unkindness in concealing the matter from him. Finding himself discovered, John was for quitting the Laura, nor could St Sabas prevail on him to stay, but on a promise never to divulge the secret. John lived after this four years in his cell, without speaking to any one except to the person who brought him necessaries. In the year 503, the factious spirit of certain turbulent disciples obliged St Sabas to quit his Laura. St John, that he might have no part in such an unhappy disturbance, withdrew into a neighbouring wilderness, where he spent six years in silence, conversing only with God, and subsisting on the wild roots and herbs which the desert afforded. When St Sabas was called home again, he went to seek St John in his desert, and brought him back in 510. But a long and happy experience had taught him that a soul, which has been accustomed to converse only with God, finds nothing but emptiness and bitterness in any thing besides. His love of obscurity and humility made him desire more and more to live unknown to men: but such was the lustre of his sanctity, as rendered it impossible for him to succeed herein to the full extent of his desire. He went back with his old master, and confined himself for forty years to his cell after his return to the Laura: but did not refuse instructions to those that resorted to him: Among whom was the judicious and learned monk Cyril, who wrote his life when the saint had lived forty years in his hermitage after his return, and was one hundred and four years old. He at that age retained the vigour of his mind, and that sweetness which rendered him always amiable and venerable. This Cyril of Scythopolis, who is one of the ablest writers of antiquity, relates, that in his youth, when he was about sixteen years of age, he addressed himself to St John, who was then ninety years old, and begged his advice concerning the choice of a state of life. The holy old man advised him to dedicate himself to God in the monastery of St Euthymius. Cyril, however, preferred one of the little monasteries on the banks of the Jordan. But he was no sooner arrived at the place, than he fell sick of a fever. His distemper every day augmented, and he began grievously to afflict and condemn himself for having neglected the advice of the servant of God. But in the night St John appearing to him in his sleep, after a gentle reprimand for not having followed his counsel, told him that if he repaired to the monastery of St Euthymius, he should be restored to his health, and should find his salvation. The next morning he arose, and notwithstanding the intreaties of the brethren, broke from them, and having taken no other refreshment but that of the blessed Eucharist which he had received that morning, he set out, walked to the aforesaid monastery of St Euthy-mius, and found himself perfectly recovered. The same author tells us, that whilst he was conversing one day with St John on matters of piety, he saw a man named George bring his son, who was a child, possessed by the devil, and lay him on the ground before the saint without speaking a word. St John understood the miserable condition of the child, and made the sign of the cross on his forehead with blessed oil, and the same instant the child was delivered from the evil spirit. A nobleman of Constantinople, who was infected with Eutychianism, was introduced by one Theodorus to the saint. The holy man gave his blessing to Theodorus, but refused it to the nobleman, with a mild reproach for his schism and heresy; who, seeing that he could only have been apprised of these circumstances by revelation, became upon the spot a most devout catholic. St John, by his example and counsels, conducted many fervent souls to God, and continued in his hermitage to emulate, as much as this mortal state will allow, the glorious employment of the heavenly spirits in an uninterrupted exercise of love and praise, till he passed to their blessed company, soon after the year 558; having lived seventy-six years in the desert, which had only been interrupted by the nine years of his episcopal dignity.

His astonishing austerity, love of silence, and sublime contemplation, condemn the unmortified spirit and dissipation of the world. Interior recollection is, as it were, the soul of Christian virtue. Without it the most active zeal and devotion will only be superficial. A dissipated heart can never be truly devout. One that is united with God, and relishes the sweetness of his divine converse, finds the tumult of creatures and the noise of the world an insupportable burden, and he truly understands from experience what pure joy holy solitude is able to afford. A love of Christian silence, or a silence of virtue and choice, not of stupidity or sullenness, is a proof that a soul makes it her chiefest delight to be occupied on God, and finds no comfort like that of conversing with him. This is the paradise of all devout souls.

ON THE SAME DAY.

St PETER REGALATI, C. This saint was descended of a noble family, and having lost his father in his infancy, in the 13th year of his age, he extorted, with great difficulty, his mother's consent to enter himself in the Franciscan friars at Valladolid, of which city he was a native. By his extraordinary fervour he was distinguished among his brethren. When F. Peter Villacretios, who had established a rigorous reformation of his Order at Aquileria in the diocese of Osma, founded a second retired convent, more like a prison than a house, at Tribulos, on the Duero near Aquileria, our saint, at his earnest request, was admitted one of this colony. By the austerity of his penance, his assiduity in contemplation, and the sublime gift of prayer with which he was endowed, he seems to have equalled the most eminent saints of his Order. The sufferings of our divine Redeemer were the principal entertainment of his soul, and he lived in a constant union with God. Upon the death of F. Villacretios, he succeeded him in the government of his reformed congregation, and died at Aquileria on the 30th of March, in the 66th year of his age, of our Lord 1456. He was canonized by Benedict XIV. in 1746, and his name is placed in the Roman martyrology on the 13th of May, the day of the translation of his relicks. On his extraordinary raptures, miracles, and heroic virtues, see the process and bull of his canonization, p. 73. 121. and 544. Also the relations made in the tribunal of the Rota, published by Benedict XIV. de Canoniz. l. 2. Append. 7. T. 2. p. 629, ad p. 672. and his life compiled by F. Daza, a Spanish Franciscan, published by Henschenius on the 30th of March, T. 3. Mart. P. 853.

St SERVATIUS, Bishop of Tongres. He gave St Athanasius, during his banishment, a friendly and honourable reception, strenuously defended his cause, and the catholic faith, especially in the council of Sardica; resisted the Arians at Remini, and laboured much in preventing the ill consequences with which the church was threatened by the misconduct of the bishops in that council, through the fraud of the Arians. St Gregory of Tours relates, that he foretold that the Huns would invade Gaul, and implored the divine mercy to avert that scourge, by watching, fasting, prayers, and many tears, and by a pilgrimage to Rome to the tomb of St Peter. This penitential journey he undertook in the year 382, that he might obtain the patronage of the apostles in behalf of his people, for whom he never ceased to implore the divine mercy, by watching, fasting, and prayer, accompanied with tears. But he was informed by a revelation, that God had determined to punish the sins of that nation, which calamity, like Ezechias, he was assured his eyes should never behold. Thereupon weeping, he hastened back to Tongres, where he shortly after sickened, and died on the 13th of May 384, having been bishop about 37 years, not 56, as is affirmed in the new edition of Moreri. St Gregory testifies, that miracles drew many to his tomb, and that a church was erected over it. His body remains in the noble collegiate church in Maestricht, except some small portions distributed in other places. The city of Tongres was shortly after plundered, and left in ruins by Attila, since which time it retains nothing of its ancient splendor. Some pretend that St Servatius removed his episcopal see to Maestricht a little before his death: but it is certain that translation was only made in the following century, after the city of Tongres was destroyed by Attila. See the works of St Athanasius, St Gregory of Tours, Hist. Francor. &c. in Henschenius, p. 210. Also Rivet, Hist. Liter. de la France, T. 1. part. 2. p. 242. Foullon, Histor. Leod. T. 1. p. 43. and Henschenius, in the Acta Sanctorum, in his Exegesis De Episcopatu Tungrensi et Trajectensi, prefixed to T. 7. Maij.

M A Y XIV.

ST BONIFACE, M.

From his authentic Acts in Henschenius, p. 283. Fleury, &c.

ABOUT THE YEAR 307.

THERE lived at Rome, about the beginning of the fourth century, a certain lady called Aglae, young, beautiful, and well born, and so rich and fond of making a figure in the world, that she had entertained the city three several times with public shows at her own charge. Her chief steward was one Boniface, with whom she entertained a criminal commerce. This man, though addicted to wine and all kinds of debauchery, was however remarkable for three good qualities, hospitality, liberality and compassion. Whensoever he saw a stranger, or traveller, he would assist him very cordially; and he used to go about the streets, and into the public places in the night time, and relieved the poor according to their necessities. After several years commerce in the vicious way already mentioned, Aglae, touched with a motion of divine grace, and feeling some compunction within herself, called Boniface to her, and thus opened her mind to him: "You are sensible how deep we are plunged in vice, without reflecting that we must appear before God to give an account of all our actions. I have heard say, that they who honour those that suffer for the sake of Jesus Christ, shall have a share in their glory. In the East the servants of Jesus Christ every day suffer torments, and lay down their lives for his sake. Go thither, then, and bring me the relicks of some of those conquerors, that we may honour their memories; and be saved by their assistance." Boniface came into the proposal, and having raised a considerable sum of money to purchase the bodies of the martyrs from their executioners, and to distribute among the poor, said to Aglae on his departure:

“ I wont fail to bring back with me the relicks of martyr, if I find any; but what if my own body should be brought to you for that of a martyr?” She reproved him for jesting in a matter so serious. The steward set out, but was now entirely a new man. Penetrated with sentiments of compunction, in all that long journey from Rome into the East he neither eat meat, nor drank wine; and his fasts he accompanied with prayers, tears, and penitential works. The church at that time enjoyed peace in the West, but in the East the persecution, which had been begun by Dioclesian, was carried on with great cruelty by Galerius Maximianus and Maximinus Daia. It raged most fiercely in Cilicia, under an inhuman governor named Simplicius. Boniface therefore directed his journey to Tarsus, the capital of that country. He no sooner arrived at the city, but alighting, he sent away all his servants with the horses to an inn, and went himself strait to the court of the governor, whom he found seated on his tribunal, and many holy martyrs suffering under their tortures: one hanged up by the feet, with his head over a fire: another stretched almost to the tearing of his limbs on four planks or stakes: a third sawn asunder: a fourth had his hands cut off: a fifth was fixed to the ground by a stake run through his neck: a sixth having his hands and feet tied behind him, the executioners were beating him with clubs. There were no less than twenty tortured after this cruel manner, the sight whereof shocked the beholders, while their courage and resolution filled them with amazement. Boniface went boldly up to these champions of Christ, and having saluted them, cried out: “ Great is the God of the Christians, great is the God of the holy martyrs. I beseech you, the servants of Jesus Christ, to pray for me, that I may join with you in fighting against the devil.” The governor thought himself insulted by so bold an action in his presence, and asked him in great wrath, who he was. The martyr answered, that he was a Christian, and that having Jesus Christ for his master, he feared nothing the governor could inflict to make him renounce that sacred name. Simplicius in a rage ordered some reeds to be sharpened and thrust under his nails: and this being done, he commanded boiling lead to be poured into his mouth. Boniface, after having called upon Jesus Christ for his assistance, begged the prayers of the other expiring martyrs, who all joined in putting up their petitions to God for him. The people, disgusted with so much cruelty, began to raise a tumult and cried out: "Great is the God of the Christians." Simplicius was alarmed, and withdrew. But the next day, being seated on his tribunal, he ordered Boniface to be brought before him a second time. The martyr appeared constant and undaunted. The judge commanded him to be cast into a caldron of boiling pitch: but he came out without receiving any hurt. Lastly, he was condemned to lose his head; and after a short prayer for the pardon of his sins, and the conversion of his persecutors, he cheerfully presented his neck to the executioner. His companions, in the mean time, not finding him return to the inn, searched for him in those parts of the city where they thought him most likely to be found. Being at last informed by the jailor's brother, that a stranger had been beheaded the day before, for his faith in Christ, and being shewn the dead body and the head, they assured him that it was the very person they were in search of, and beseeched him to bestow the martyr's relicks upon them; this he refused to do without a reward: so they paid down 500 pieces of gold; and having embalmed it, carried it home with them, praising God for the happy end of the blessed martyr. Aglae, upon information of the affair, gave God thanks for his victory, and taking some priests with her, met the corpse with tapers and perfumes half a mile out of Rome, on the Latin road; (a) and in that very place raised a monument, in which she laid them, and some years after built a chapel. She from that time led a penitential retired life, and dying fifteen years after, was buried near his relicks. They were found in Rome in 1603, together with those of St Alexius, in the church in Rome formerly called of St Boniface, but now of St Alexius. The bodies of both St Boniface and St Alexius lie under the stately high altar, in two rich marble tombs. The martyrdom of St Boniface happened about the year 307.

(a) We cannot be surprised at this circumstance in the acts, on reflecting that the church at Rome then enjoyed peace. Consurgens Aglae's confestim accepit secum clericos et viros religiosos; et sic cum hymnis et canticis spiritualibus et omni veneratione obviamii sancto corpori. (Ruin. p. 290. fol.) The like is related of the martyr St. Cyprian, even in the heat of the persecution, that his disciples carried off his body with wax-lights and torches. Inde per noctem sublatum cum cereis, &c. ib. p. 218.

Whilst we praise the divine mercy, who of sinners maketh saints, we ought earnestly to pray, that he change our hearts from vessels of corruption into vessels of grace and his divine charity. Regret and sorrow for sin has many degrees: but, till it has entirely subdued the corruptions, changed the affections and purified the heart, it is not a saving repentance, (1) or that charity and love which animates or impregnates the new creature. (2) The certain proof of regeneration or of a real conversion is victory. He that is born of God overcometh the world. (3) The maxims of the gospel, the rules of the church, and reason itself, forbid us to look upon him as a sincere convert whose life is very uneven, inconstant and contradictory to itself; if he be to-day a saint, and to-morrow a sinner; if he follow to-day the impulses of the Holy Ghost, and yield to-morrow to the temptations of the enemy; or if he has not courage to fly the dangers, and renounce the occasions which are fatal to him.

ST PACHOMIUS, ABBOT.

From his authentic life compiled by a monk of Tabenna soon after his death. See Tillemont, T. 7. Ceillier, T. 4. Helyot, T. 1. Rosweide, l. 1. p. 114. and Papebroke, T. 3. Maij. p. 287.

A. D. 348.

THOUGH St Antony be justly esteemed the institutor of the cenobitic life, or that of religious persons living in community under a certain rule, St Pa-

(1) 2 Cor. vii. 10. (2) Gal. v. 6. (3) 1 John v. 4

chomius was the first who drew up a monastic rule in writing. He was born in Upper Thebais about the year 292, of idolatrous parents, and was educated in their blind superstition, and in the study of the Egyptian sciences. From his infancy he was meek and modest, and had an aversion to the profane ceremonies used by the infidels in the worship of their idols. Being about 20 years of age, he was pressed into the emperor's troops, probably the tyrant Maximinus, (a) who was master of Egypt from the year 310, and in 312 made great levies to carry on a war against Licinius and Constantine. He was with several other recruits, put on board a vessel that was falling down the river. They arrived in the evening at Thebes or Diospolis, the capital of Thebais, a city in which dwelt many Christians. These true disciples of Christ sought every opportunity of relieving and comforting all that were in distress, and were moved with compassion towards the recruits, who were kept close confined, and very ill-treated. The Christians of this city shewed them the same tenderness as if they had been their own children; took all possible care of them, and supplied them liberally with money and necessaries. Such an uncommon example of disinterested virtue made a great impression on the mind of Pachomius. He enquired who their pious benefactors were, and when he heard that they belived in Jesus Christ the only Son of God, and that, in the hope of a reward in the world to come, they laboured continually to do good to all mankind, he found kindled in his heart a great love of so holy a law, and an ardent desire of serving the God whom these good men adored. The next day when he was continuing his journey down the river, the remembrance of this purpose strengthened him to resist a carnal temptation. From his infancy he had been always a lover of chastity and temperance; but the example of the Christians had made those virtues appear to him far more amiable, and in a new light. After the overthrow of Maximinus, his forces were disbanded. Pachomius was no sooner returned home, but he repaired to a town in Thebais, in which there was a Christian church, and there he entered his name among the catechumens, or such as were preparing for baptism; and having gone through the usual course of preliminary instructions and practices with great attention and fervour, he received that sacrament at Chenoboscium, with great sentiments of piety and devotion. From his first acquaintance with our holy faith at Thebes, he had always made this his prayer: "O God, Creator of heaven and earth, cast on me an eye of pity: deliver me from my miseries: teach me the true way of pleasing you; and it shall be the whole employment, and most earnest study of my life, to serve you, and to do your will." The perfect sacrifice of his heart to God was the beginning of his eminent virtue. The grace by which God reigns in a soul, is a treasure infinitely above all price. We must give all to purchase it. (1) To desire it faintly is to undervalue it. He is absolutely disqualified, and unfit for so great a blessing, and unworthy ever to receive it, who seeks it by halves, or who does not esteem all other things as dung that he may gain Christ.

(a) Those who place the conversion of St Pachomius later, think this emperor was Constantine. But for our account see Tillemont, Hist. Eccl. note 2. T. 7. p. 675.

When Pachomius was baptized, he began seriously to consider with himself how he should most faithfully fulfil the obligations which he had contracted, and attain to the great end to which he aspired. There is danger even in fervour itself. It is often an artifice of the devil to make a novice undertake too much at first, and run indiscreetly beyond his strength. If the sails gather too much wind, the vessel is driven a-head, falls on some rock and splits. Eagerness is a symptom of secret passion, not of true virtue, where it is wilful, and impatient at advice. Pachomius was far from so dangerous a disposition, because his desire was pure, therefore his first care was to find a skilful conductor. Hearing that a venerable old man named Palemon served God in the desert in great perfection, he sought him out, and with great earnestness begged to live under his direction. The hermit, having set before him the difficulties and austerities of his way of life, which several had already attempted in vain to follow, advised him to make a trial of his strength and fervour in some monastery; and, to give him a sketch of the difficulties he had to encounter in the life he aspired to, he added: "Consider, my son, that my diet is only bread and salt: I drink no wine, use no oil, watch one half of the night, spending that time in singing psalms, or in meditating on the holy scriptures, and sometimes pass the whole night without sleeping." Pachomius was amazed at this account, but not discouraged. He thought himself able to undertake every thing that might be a means to render his soul pleasing to God, and readily promised to observe whatever Palemon should think fit to enjoin him; who thereupon admitted him into his cell, and gave him the monastic habit. Pachomius was by his example enabled to bear solitude, and an acquaintance with himself. They sometimes repeated together the psalter, at other times they exercised themselves in manual labours (which they accompanied with interior prayer) with a view to their own subsistence and the relief of the poor. Pachomius prayed above all things for perfect purity of heart, that, being disengaged from all secret attachment to creatures, he might love God with all his affections. And, to destroy the very roots of all inordinate passions, it was his first study to obtain the most profound humility, and perfect patience and meekness. He prayed often with his arms stretched out in the form of a cross; which posture was then much used in the church. He was in the beginning often drowsy at the night-office. Palemon used to rouse him, and say: "Labour and watch, my dear Pachomius, lest the enemy overthrow you, and ruin all your endeavours." Against this weakness and temptation he enjoined him, on such occasions, to carry sand from one place to another, till his drowsiness was overcome. By this means the novice strengthened himself in the habit of watching. Whatever instructions he read or heard, he immediately endeavoured fervently to reduce to practice. One

(1) Matth. xiii. 44.

Easter-day Palemon bade the disciple prepare a dinner for the great festival. Pachomius took a little oil, and mixed it with the salt, which he pounded small, and added a few wild herbs, which they were to eat with their bread. The holy old man having made his prayer, came to table; but, at the sight of the oil, he struck himself on the forehead, and said with tears: "My Saviour was crucified, and shall I indulge myself so far as to eat oil?" Nor could he be prevailed upon to taste it. Pachomius used sometime to go into a vast uninhabited desert, on the banks of the Nile, called Tabenna, in the diocese of Tentyra, a city between the Great and Little Diospolis. Whilst he was there one day in prayer, he heard a voice which commanded him to build a monastery in that place, in which he should receive those who should be sent by God to serve him faithfully. He received about the same time from an angel, who appeared to him, certain instructions relating to a monastic life. (a) Pachomius going back to Palemon, imparted to him this vision: and both of them coming to Tabenna, built there a little cell towards the year 325, about 20 years after St Antony had founded his first monastery. After a short time Palemon returned to his former dwelling, having promised his disciple an yearly visit, but he died soon after, and is honoured in the Roman martyrology on the 11th of January.

Pachomius received first his own eldest brother John, and after his death many others, so that he enlarged his house; and the number of his monks in a short time amounted to an hundred. Their clothing was of rough linen; that of St Pachomius himself often hair cloth. He passed fifteen years without ever lying down, taking his short rest sitting on a stone. He even grudged himself the least time which he allowed to necessary sleep, because he wished he could have been able to employ all his moments in the actual exercises of divine love.

(a) Some late editions say the angel gave St Pachomius the whole rule in writing, which he prescribed to his monks; but this is an interpolation not found in the genuine life published by the Bollandists, Malj. T. 3. 10. p. 201.

From the time of his conversion he never eat a full meal. By his rule, the fasts, and tasks of work were proportioned to every one's strength; though all ate together in one common refectory, in silence, with their cowl or hood drawn over their heads, that they might not see one another at their meals. Their habit was a tunic of white linen without sleeves, with a cowl of the same stuff; they wore on their shoulders, a white goat-skin called a Melotes. They received the holy communion on the first and last days of every week. Novices were tried with great severity, before they were admitted to the habit, the taking of which was then deemed the monastic profession, and attended with the vows. St. Pachomius preferred none of his monks to holy orders, and his monasteries were often served by priests from abroad; though he admitted priests to the habit when any presented themselves, and he employed them in the functions of their ministry. All his monks were occupied in various kinds of manual labour: no moment was allowed for idleness. The saint, with the greatest care, comforted and served the sick himself. Silence was so strictly observed at Tabenna, that a monk who wanted any thing necessary was only to ask for it by signs. In going from one place to another, the monks were ordered always to meditate on some passage of the holy scripture, and sing psalms at their work. The sacrifice of the mass was offered for every monk that died, as we read in the life of St. Pachomius (2). His rule was translated into Latin by St. Jerom, and is still extant. He received the sickly and weak, rejecting none for the want of corporal strength, being desirous to conduct to heaven all souls which had fervour to walk in the paths of perfection. He built six other monasteries in Thebais, not far asunder, and from the year 336, chose often to reside in that of Pabau or Pau, near Thebes, in its territory, though not far from Tabenna, situated in the neighbouring province of Diospolis, also in Thebais. Pabau became a more numerous and more famous monastery than Tabenna itself. By the advice of Serapion, bishop of

(2) Acta Sanctorum Maij. T. 3. p. 32r.

Tentyra, he built a church in a village for the benefit of the poor shepherds, in which for some time he performed the office of Lector, reading to the people the word of God with admirable fervour: in which function he appeared rather like an angel than a man. He converted many infidels, and zealously opposed the Arians, but could never be induced by his bishop to receive the holy order of priesthood. In 333, he was favoured with a visit of St Athanasius, at Tabenna, His sister at a certain time came to his monastery desiring to see him: but he sent her word at the gate, that no woman could be allowed to enter his enclosure, and that she ought to be satisfied with hearing that he was alive. However, it being her desire to embrace a religious state, he built her a nunnery on the other side of the Nile, which was soon filled with holy virgins. St Pachomius going one day to Panè, one of his monasteries, met the funeral procession of a tepid monk, deceased. Knowing the wretched state in which he died, and to strike a terror into the slothful, he forbid his monks to proceed in singing psalms, and ordered the clothes which covered the corpse to be burnt, saying, "Honours could only increase his torments; but the ignominy with which his body was treated, might move God to shew more mercy to his soul: for God forgives some sins not only in this world, but also in the next." When the procurator of the house had sold the matts at market, at a higher price than the saint had bid him, he ordered him to carry back the money to the buyers, and chastised him for his avarice.

Among many miracles wrought by him, the author of his life assures us, that though he had never learned the Greek or Latin tongues, he sometimes miraculously spoke them: he cured the sick, and persons possessed by devils, with blest oil. But he often told sick or distressed persons, that their sickness or affliction was an effect of the divine goodness in their behalf: and he only prayed for their temporal comfort, with this clause or condition, if it would not prove hurtful to their souls. His dearest disciple St Theodorus, who after his death succeeded him in the government of his monasteries, was afflicted with a perpetual headach. St Pachomius, when desired by some of the brethren to pray for his health, answered: "Though abstinence and prayer be of great merit, yet sickness suffered with patience is of much greater." He chiefly begged of God the spiritual health of the souls of his disciples and others, and took every opportunity to curb and heal their passions, especially that of pride. One day a certain monk having doubled his diligence at work, and made two matts instead of one, set them where St Pachomius might see them. The saint perceiving the snare, said, "This brother hath taken a great dail of pains from morning till night, to give his work to the devil." And, to cure his vanity by humiliatios, he enjoined him by the way of penance to keep his cell five months, with no other allowance than a little bread, salt, and water. A young man, named Sylvanus, who had been an actor on the stage, entered the monastery of St Pachomius with the view of doing penance: but led for some time an undisciplined life, often transgressing the rules of the house, and still fond of entertaining himself and others with buffooneries. The man of God endeavoured to make him sensible of his danger by charitable remonstrances, and also employed his more potent arms of prayer, sighs and tears for his poor soul. Though for some time he found his endeavours fruitless, he did not desist on that account; and having one day represented to this impenitent sinner, in a very pathetic manner, the dreadful judgments which threaten those that mock God, the divine grace touching the heart of Sylvanus, he from that moment began to lead a life of great edification to the rest of the brethren; and being moved with the most feeling sentiments of compunction, he never failed, wheresoever he was, and howsoever employèd, to bewail with bitterness his past misdemeanors. When others intreated him to moderate the floods of his tears: "Ah," said he, "how can I help weeping, when I consider the wretchedness of my past life, and that by my sloth I have profaned what was most sacred? I have reason to fear lest the earth should open under my feet, and swallow me up, as it did Dathan and Abiron. Oh! suffer me to labour with ever-flowing fountains of tears, to expiate my innumerable sins. I ought if I could, even to pour forth this wretched soul of mine in mourning; it would be all too little for my offences." In these sentiments of contrition he made so great progress in virtue, that the holy abbot proposed him as a model of humility to the rest; and when, after eight years spent in this penitential course, God had called him to himself by a holy death, St Pachomius was assured by a revelation, that his soul was presented by angels a most agreeable sacrifice to Christ. The saint was favoured with a spirit of prophecy, and with great grief foretold the decay of monastic fervour in his Order in succeeding ages. In 348, he was cited before a council of bishops at Latopolis to answer certain matters laid to his charge. He justified himself against the calumniators, but in such a manner that the whole council admired his extraordinary humility. The same year God afflicted his monasteries with a pestilence which swept off an hundred monks. The saint himself fell sick, and during forty days suffered a painful distemper with incredible patience and cheerfulness, discovering a great interior joy at the approach of the end of his earthly pilgrimage. In his last moments he exhorted his monks to fervour, and having armed himself with the sign of the cross, resigned his happy soul into the hands of his Creator in the 57th year of his age. He lived to see in his different monasteries 7000 monks. His Order subsisted in the East till the eleventh century: for Anselm bishop of Havelburgh writes, that he saw 500 monks of this institute in a monastery at Constantinople. St Pachomius formed his disciples to so eminent a degree of perfection chiefly by his own fervent spirit and example; for he always appeared the first, the most exact, and the most fervent, in all the exercises of the community. To the fervour and watchfulness of the superior it was owing that in so numerous a community discipline was observed with astonishing regularity, as Palladius and Cassian observe. The former says that they eat with their cowl drawn so as to hide the greatest part of their faces, and with their eyes cast down never looking at one another. Many contented themselves with taking a very few mouthfuls of bread and oil, or of such like dish; others of potage only. So great was the silence that reigned amongst them whilst every one followed his employment, that in the midst of so great a multitude a person seemed to be in a solitude. Cassian tells us, (3) that the more numerous the monastery was, the more perfect and rigorous was regular observance of discipline, and all constantly obeyed their superior more readily than a single person is found to do in other places. Nothing so much weakens the fervour of inferiors as the example of a superior who easily allows himself exemptions or dispensations in the rule. The relaxation of monastic discipline is often owing to no other cause. How enormous is the crime of such a scandal!

ON THE SAME DAY.

St PONTIUS, an illustrious primitive martyr. He suffered in the persecution of Valerian, about the year 258, at Cimelé a city in the Alps which was afterwards destroyed by the Lombards: when from its ruins arose in the neighbourhood the town of Nice in Savoy. Of the old city only the famous abbey of St Pons at Cimelé, or Cimies, subsists: and the relicks of the holy martyr were translated to the monastery of Tomiers in Languedoc, where pope John XXII. erected an episcopal see, called St Pons de Tomieres. The abbey of Tomieres was secularized in 1625. St Valerian, bishop of Cimelé in the fifth century, in the three panegyrics which he has left us of this martyr, assures us that many miracles were wrought at his relicks. See the Bollandists.

St CARTHAGH, (a) commonly called MOCHUDU, Bi-

(3) Cassian l. 4. Instit. c. 1.

(a) This St Carthagh is called the younger, to distinguish him from St Carthagh the elder, who succeeded St Kieran Saigir in Ossory.

shop of Lismore. This eminent director of souls in the narrow paths of Christian perfection, was a native of Munster in Ireland. The famous monastery of Raithin or Ratheny in Westmeath was founded by him. He drew up a particular monastic rule, which is said to be still extant in very old Irish: but it was afterwards incorporated into that of the regular canons of St Austin, when the abbey of Raithin adopted that institute, which, though it has been since mitigated, in the eleventh and twelfth centuries seems to have been scarce less austere than that of La Trappe at present. St Carthagh is said to have under his direction above eight hundred and sixty monks, who confined themselves to feed on vegetables, which they raised and cultivated with their own hands. In 631, or according to the annals of Inisfallen in 636, he was driven out of Raithin, which he had then governed forty years, by king Blathmac, and retired to the territory of Nandesi, or Desies, in Munster. Here, upon the banks of a river (b) he laid the foundation of a great monastery and school, which flourished exceedingly for many ages. The place before his coming thither was called Magh-Sgiath, it then took the name of Duns-ginne, and afterwards Lismore, which name it has ever since retained. (c) St Carthagh founded here the episcopal see of Lismore, which was united to that of Waterford by pope Urban V. in 1363, at the request of king Edward III. this latter having only been founded in 1096. The city of Lismore, from the reputation of the sanctity and miracles of St Carthagh, its first bishop, was esteemed in succeeding ages a holy city, which appellation its great school and monastery continued to maintain. Half of this city was an asyllum into which no woman ever dared to enter, it being full of cells and holy monasteries. Thither holy men flocked from all parts of Ireland, many also from Britain, being desirous to remove from thence to Christ. St Carthagh left an eminent share of his spirit to his disciples and successors, but died himself soon after he had erected his cathedral, on the 14th of May in 637, or 638. He was buried in his own church at Lismore. See Colgan in MSS. ad 14. Maij. Ware, T. I. p. 547, 548, 549. Usher, Primord. Brit. Eccl. p. 910. Allemaigne, Monast. Hibern. introd. & p. 43. Annals of Inisfall. ad an. 637.

(b) This river was called Nem; afterwards Abhan-mor, i. e. Great-river; and now has the name of Black-water.

(c) Dun signifies a fort, or place seated on an eminence, and sguin a flight; which seems to allude to the flight of the saint to this place, and to the name then given it. For it was before called Magh-sgiath, or the field of the shield. Lismore denotes a great house; Lis, or Lios, in the old Irish signifying a house, or village, and mor, great.

M A Y X V.

SS. PETER, ANDREW, AND COMPANIONS, MARTYRS.

From their authentic acts in Ruinart.

A. D. 250.

IN the neighbourhood of Lampsacus, a city of Lesser Asia, near the Hellespont, was apprehended, in the persecution of Decius, a young man called Peter, remarkable for the beauty of his person, and natural endowments of his mind, but much more for his faith and virtue. He was brought before Optimus, the proconsul of Asia, who said to him: "You have before your eyes the edicts of our invincible princes: sacrifice to the goddess Venus as they command." Peter answered: "I am surprised that you should endeavour to persuade me to sacrifice to an infamous lewd woman, whose actions modesty forbids me to mention, and are such as are punishable by our own laws." Optimus ordered him to be extended on a wheel, with pieces of wood so disposed and bound on his body with iron chains, that the wheel being put in motion it might gradually occasion the breaking of his bones. The martyr turning his eyes towards the heavens, said with a chearful countenance: " I praise and thank you, O Lord Jesus Christ, for vouchsafing me patience to overcome this cruel tyrant." Optimus, seeing his unshaken resolution, ordered his head to be struck off.

After this execution, as the proconsul was going to set out for Troas, a city in Phrygia, built by Alexander near the ruins of the famous Troy, three other Christians, Andrew, Paul and Nicomachus were brought before him. He asked them whence they came, and what was their religion. Nicomachus answered with impatience, and a remarkably loud voice: " I am a Christian." The others modestly replied: " We are also Christians." The proconsul said to Nicomachus: " Sacrifice to the gods." He answered: " A Christian must not sacrifice to devils." The proconsul gave orders that he should be hung on the rack, and tortured. When he was just ready to expire under his torments, he unhappily lost his crown, and cried out: " I never was a Christian, and am ready to sacrifice to the gods." The proconsul immediately caused him to be taken off the rack, but no sooner had the miserable man offered sacrifice than he was seized by the devil, fell on the ground, and beat it with his head in violent agonies in which he expired. Thus the devil usually laughs to scorn the unhappy souls which he has drawn into sin. He lures them with great promises: but, being the father of lies, pays them with treacherous shadows, or often with bitter disappointments and calamities. A wretched exchange for their souls, and eternal happiness! God afforded his other two servants a comfort under their affliction for this loss. Denysa, a tender virgin about sixteen years old, who was standing by, was struck at this misfortune, and said: " Unfortunate wretch, why wouldst thou bring upon thyself eternal torments for the sake of a moment's ease?" Optimus, hearing these words, asked if she was a Christian; she confessed she was. He then required her to sacrifice, and threatened to expose her to prostitution, and burn her alive, in case of refusal. Finding his threats made no impression on her constancy, he ordered her to be put into the hands of two lewd young men to be deflowered. They took her with them to their lodgings: whose endeavours to force her she resisted so long, that she fairly tired them out. About midnight they were surprised at the appearance of a young man glittering with light, which diffused itself over the whole house. Upon which they were seized with fear, and cast themselves at the feet of the holy virgin. She raised them up, and bid them not be afraid, saying: "This is my guardian and protector:" and they earnestly besought her to interceed for them, that they might come to no hurt. The next morning the mob, stirred up by the priests of Diana, beset the house of the proconsul, demanding in a tumultuous manner to have Andrew and Paul delivered up to them. The proconsul, to humour them, having caused the martyrs to be brought forth, bid them sacrifice to Diana; which they refusing to do, he ordered them to be most inhumanly scourged, and then to be put into the hands of the rabble by them to be stoned to death. The populace, without further delay, having tied their feet together, dragged them out of town in order to stone them. Whilst they were under execution, Denysa heard the noise, and began to weep and wail bitterly: and, having escaped from those who guarded her, ran to the place where they were, and, upon seeing them, cried out: "That I may live with you eternally in heaven, I will die with you on earth." The proconsul, being informed of the wonderful preservation of her chastity, her escape, and desire to die with the martyrs, ordered her to be taken away from Andrew and Paul, and to be beheaded at a distance; which was accordingly put in execution.

If the martyrs had not been crucified to the world, they would never have attained to their crowns. There is a love of the world which, though it be not either for the matter, or the degree of it, criminal enough to destroy the hopes of salvation, yet abates our yigour, hinders our perfection, and bereaves us of many degrees of fervour. The indications of this kind of love of the world are, a fondness for the pomp and shew of life; too slavish an exactness in the modes and customs of the world; too quick a sense of praise, reputation and pre-eminence; too great an eagerness to grow rich; too brisk a relish of pleasures, too much diversion; too great a love of ease; or an uninterrupted pursuit of worldly business, which extinguishes all gust of virtue, and all relish of heavenly things, and leaves not the mind sufficient leisure or ardour for spiritual duties. These are symptoms of a soul tainted with a love of the world, which exceedingly checks the vigour of the mind. The means by which this defect is to be overcome is frequent meditation on eternal truths. One who has these deeply imprinted in his heart, will have no great taste of the honours, or the pleasures, or the interests of life; he will never be slothful or remiss, but always fervent in spirit, serving the Lord; and will have no emulation but for good works, no ambition but for eternal glory. In the pursuit of this will he lay out the vigour and strength of his mind, retrench his profit by alms, deny his pleasure, and rejoice to lead an obscure, mean, laborious and crucified life.

ON THE SAME DAY.

St DYMUNA, V. M. She was the daughter of an Irish king, and having by vow consecrated her virginity to God, to avoid the snares to which she saw herself exposed at home, passed to Antwerp and chose her abode at Gheel, a village in Brabant, ten leagues from Antwerp. There she served God in retirement and assiduous prayer. But being at length discovered and pursued by those who were the enemies of her chastity, she was murdered by them because she refused to consent to their brutish passion. Her relicks were solemnly taken up by the bishop of Cambrai on the 15th of May, and are preserved with veneration in a rich shrine at Gheel. She flourished in the seventh century. See Molanus, Miræus, the Roman Martyrology, Henschenius, T. 3. Maij. p. 477. and Colgan, in MSS. Contin. Act. SS. Hibern.

St GENEBRARD OF GENEVERN, M. He was an holy Irish priest who having baptized St Dymrna in her infancy, was her attendant in her flight beyond sea, and was beheaded by her murderers. His relicks were translated to Santbeck in the dutchy of Cleves, where his intercession is devoutly implored, especially for relief under the gout and in fevers; and blessed rings, which bear his name, are used. Dr Wintringham and Dr Liger, in their treatises on the gout, inform us, that this disorder rages even amongst labourers in the countries about the Rhine, in Silesia and others, where acid wines, such as the Rhenish, &c. are much drank. On St Genebrard, see Colgan, MSS. ad 15 Maij.

M A Y XVI.

ST JOHN NEPOMUCEN, M.

From his life collected by F. Balbin the Jesuit, published by Papebroke with preliminary remarks, T. 3. Maij. p. 667. Also Benedict XIV. de Canoniz. SS. and his life in French by F. Marne, Jesuit, printed at Paris in 1741, and S. Joan. Nepomuceni vita a Berghaver, cum figuris. Pragæ 1736, folio.

A. D. 1383.

THIS servant of God possessed in an eminent degree, the virtues of a perfect anchoret, and of a zealous apostle, and by his death merited the crown of a glorious martyr. His martyrdom was the more illustrious, because the religious seal of confession (or strict obligation to silence in that tribunal on the part of the priest) not having yet armed tyrants against it, had found no victims before our saint. He was born at Nepomuc, a little town in Bohemia, some leagues from Prague, about the year 1330. His parents derived from their virtue a splendor which their birth or rank in the world did not afford them. If our saint had fewer obstacles from the world to overcome in giving himself to God, his sacrifice was not less fervent, less generous or less perfect in the disposition of his heart. He was regarded as the fruit of his parents prayers. Soon after his birth his life was despaired of: but their confidence in God deserved to obtain his recovery through the intercession of the holy Virgin Mary, which they earnestly implored in the church of a neighbouring Cistercian monastery. Gratitude moved them to consecrate their son to the service of God. They neglected nothing to give him a good education: nor could a child give more promising hopes of future greatness, by his mildness, gentleness, docility, simplicity, devotion, and extraordinary application and capacity in his studies. The morning he spent in the neighbouring monastery in hearing several masses, which he did with a modesty and fervour that charmed those who saw him. When he had learned the first elements at home, he was sent to Staaze, a considerable town, to study Latin. He excelled his school-fellows in grammar, but surpassed himself in rhetoric. Charles IV. emperor of Germany and king of Bohemia, and author of the Golden Bull in 1356, (a) had lately founded the university of Prague in imitation of those at Paris and Padua. John being sent thither, distinguished himself in philosophy, divinity and canon-law: in which two last faculties he proceeded doctor. He had from his tender years regarded the priesthood as the great object of his pious ambition, that he might devote himself in the most perfect manner to promote the divine honour ; and he always made the most frequent and devout participation of the adorable sacrament of the altar a kind of noviciate to that dignity. He increased the fervour of his preparation as he grew nearer the term, and retired from the hurry of the schools and the city into a solitude, there by fasting, prayer and penance for a month, purifying his soul, and disposing himself for the grace of that holy order, which he received at the hands of his bishop. This prelate being acquainted with his extraordinary talents, commanded him immediately to employ them in preaching, and committed to him the care of the parish of our Lady of Tein. Surprising were the first effects of his zeal. The whole city flocked to hear him, and in a short time appeared very much reformed. The students, who were then not fewer than forty thousand, thronged to his discourses, and many hardened libertines returned from hearing him, knocking their breasts and full of compunction.

(a) This is called the Golden Bull from a golden seal fixed to it by silken strings. It was published with the utmost solemnity, in a great diet of all the princes, held at Nurembourg; and regulates the form of the government of the empire; the most minute circumstances to be observed in the election of an emperor. and the precedence, rights and functions of the seven first electors. For the imperial diadem, at least after the failure of the Carlovigian race, had been elective. especially after it had been settled in Germany in the person of Otho I. surnamed the Great, king of Germany, who having conquered Lombardy, was crowned emperor at Rome by pope John XII. in 962. But the manner of making this election had often varied, and frequently all the princes of the empire had been allowed to give their suffrage. This same emperor, Charles IV. created four dukes of the empire, namely those of Brunswic, Bavaria, Suabia and Lorrain: four landgraves, viz. of Thuringia, Hesse, Alsace and Leuchtenbourg, and many other princes.

The archbishop and canons preferred him to a canonry : but his constant attendance in the choir did not hinder or abate his zealous application to all his former functions, in the care of souls. The emperor Charles IV. having reigned thirty-two years, renowned for wisdom and piety, died at Prague in 1378, crowned with the benediction of his subjects. For though he had atchieved no great exploits, he had always been a lover and protector of the church and his people. By great largesses to the electors, he procured his son Wenceslas to be chosen king of the Romans in 1376. This prince succeeded him in the empire upon his death the year following, being only sixteen years old. Intoxicated with power and flattery, he discovered early symptoms of the most savage and vicious inclinations, by which he has deserved the infamous surnames of the Slothful and the Drunkard. He resided at Prague, and hearing high commendations of St John, he pitched upon him to preach the Lent to his court. The holy man saw how difficult and dangerous a task it would be to make the emperor relish the genuine truths of the gospel, as he was not unacquainted with his stupid and brutish temper. However, he accepted the employ, and was much applauded by the court and by the emperor himself; and his discourses proved for some time a check to his passions. In testimony of his esteem, he offered the saint the first vacant bishopric, which was that of Leitomeritz, but no motives could prevail upon him to accept of that dignity. It was thought that perhaps the care and labours inseparable from such a charge, contributed to his refusal. He was therefore offered the provostship of Wischeradt, which (next to the bishoprics) is the first ecclesiastical dignity of the kingdom of Böhemia, and to which are annexed great revenues of one hundred thousand German florins a year, with the honourable title of hereditary chancellor of the kingdom, and this without dangers or fatigues. But to reason thus is not to know the saints. If they refuse great places when they present labours to their zeal, and crosses to their virtue, what must they think of those which offer nothing but riches and honours? The virtuous canon was therefore here again as firm as ever. But the more he shunned the esteem of men the more it followed him. He however accepted soon after the office of almoner of the court, which could only give him an authority and assistance the better to perform his duty as preacher to the court, and enable him in a private capacity to assist the poor, and to gain souls to God. Nor had this charge either the distractions, or the riches or honours, which had so much affrighted him in the dignities before mentioned. Thus humility fixed him in the court, whither ambition leads others. He appeared there the same man he had been in his private life. His apartment was the rendezvous of all that were in affliction or distress. He declared himself their general advocate, and the father of the poor, and of all who suffered by unjust oppressions. His charity was also sagacious in finding out, and secretly reconciling all dissensions which arose in the court or city: of many whereof authentic monuments are still preserved, in which the patience of this great man, his penetration and judgment, and the equity of his decisions, are equally admired. He found time for every thing, because the saints, who in temporal concerns forget themselves, find more leisure than other men for the service of their neighbours.

The empress Jane, daughter of Albert of Bavaria, earl of Hainault and Holland, was a most virtuous and accomplished princess. Touched by the divine unction of the holy preacher, she chose him for the director of her conscience. The emperor loved her with the most violent passion : but as he was capricious and changeable, he often abandoned himself to fits of jealousy, which, joined to the natural fierceness and brutish fury of his temper, gave the princess much to suffer. As the world is saved by the sufferings of a God, so it is by afflictions that all the saints are crowned. To make the empress one by the crucifixion of her heart to whatever might divide it from God, the Lord employed the persecution of her husband, which was sometimes cruel to the utmost excess. But he gave her a comforter and guide in our saint, by whose counsels she squared her life. What fruit did not she reap by this means in a few years? Supported by a man whose zeal prepared him to martyrdom, she learned to suffer her afflictions with joy. Not only this princess, but all the virtuous persons of the court, sought to have the saint for their director, and he seemed to possess the talent of making saints upon the throne, and in the court, and men happy upon the cross. He also took upon him the direction of the nuns of the castle of Prague, whom he conducted in the exercises of a spiritual life, in such a manner that this house became a model of perfection to all others. The empress, though always a person of virtue, became much more devout after she began to follow his advice. She became altogether religious, and was not afraid to appear such. The churches were the ordinary places in which she was to be found : she spent in them whole days on her knees, and in a recollection which was the admiration of every one. Her prayers were only interrupted by offices of charity to the poor (whom she served with her own hands) or by a short time for meals and relaxation, which she passed in conversing with her ladies on eternity and spiritual matters, on which she spoke with an ardour which bespoke her own fervour. This fire she nourished in her heart by the frequent use of the sacraments, and the practice of perpetual mortification. Such was her holy fear of God, that the very shadow of the least sin made her tremble; and, upon the fear of the least failing or imperfection, she hastened to expiate it in the sacred tribunal of penance; from which she never came but with a heart broken with sorrow, and her eyes bathed in tears.

As a corrupted heart turns every thing into poison, Wenceslas grew the more impatient and extravagant by the piety of his consort, and by the tenderness and condescension with which she always behaved towards him: and in the return of a fit of mad jealousy, he made her virtuous conduct an argument for his suspicions. To know her interior, he formed a design of extorting from St John what she had disclosed to him in the secret of confession, by which means he thought he should learn all the private sentiments she had ever entertained concerning him. In this view he sent for the holy man, and at first began indirectly to sift him, and at length openly put to him his impious questions. The saint, struck with horror, represented to him, in the most respectful manner possible, how notoriously injurious such a sacrilege was both to reason and religion. But the emperor, who had been long accustomed to deal with slaves, thought that no one ought to resist his will. However, in the end he dissembled his rage; but the saint saw in his dark gloomy silence what he was to expect from so revengeful a prince. It happened one day, that the tyrant, finding a fowl not roasted to his taste at table, gave an order surpassing, if possible, the extravagances of Caligula or Heliogabalus, that the cook should be immediately spitted, and roasted alive at the same fire at which the fowl had been dressed. The officers were preparing to execute the barbarous sentence, which no one durst contradict, when St John was informed of it; the poor servant was already pierced with several spits, and broiling before the fire, when the saint ran in and threw himself at the emperor's feet. Wenceslas neither listened to his remonstrances, nor regarded the threats of divine vengeance: but the more earnestly the saint pressed him, the more outrageous he grew. At length he commanded him to be thrown into a dungeon; where he lay several days rejoicing in his chains, being sensible that the true cause was his former firmness in refusing to disclose the confession of the empress. Nor did Wenceslas make a mystery of it: for he sent him this message, that as long as he refused to disclose to him the confession of the empress, there was for him no hope of liberty. Yet some days after, a gentleman of the palace came with an order to release him, begging, in the emperor's name, that he would forget the ill treatment he had received, and dine the next day with his majesty, who had prepared a great entertainment for his sake, and to do him honour before his whole court. He was accordingly treated with the greatest magnificence and exterior marks of esteem and kindness. After the banquet, Wenceslas dismissed all the rest, and began to discourse with the saint in private, first about indifferent matters, but in the end pressing him all manner of ways to lay open to him the confession of the empress, promising secrecy, and all honours and riches, and threatening a refusal with the most horrible tortures and death. The saint answered firmly, and made fresh attempts to satisfy him on the justice and obligation of his silence. The tyrant at last gave orders that he should be carried back to prison and inhumanly tortured. He was stretched on a sort of a rack: burning torches were applied to his sides, and to the most sensible parts of his body: he was burnt at a slow fire, and tormented other ways. Under his tortures he pronounced no other words but the sacred names of Jesus and Mary, and, when loosened from the rack, was left half dead. Our Lord visited his servant in this abandoned condition, and filled his soul with the most sweet consolations. In the mean time the empress was informed, and by her prayers, tears, and importunities, obtained of Wenceslas the enlargement of the servant of God. He therefore appeared again at court, but like a persecuted saint, full of joy and courage, shewing by his countenance that he regarded his sufferings as the favours of heaven. Notwithstanding the present good humour of the prince, he prepared himself for death; and as if to take leave, and to supply by extraordinary labour the shortness of his time, he began to preach with greater zeal than ever. In one of these sermons, on that text, A little while and you shall not see me, he often repeated, I have now but little time to speak to you; and in the close of his discourse clearly foretold, in a prophetic rapture, and shedding an abundance of tears, the evils which were shortly to fall on the church of Bohemia; literally verified in the Hussite tumults and civil wars. Coming out of the pulpit, having taken the last leave of his auditory, he begged pardon of the canons and clergy, for the bad example which he humbly accused himself to have given them. From that day he gave himself up totally to those exercises which were a more immediate preparation of his own soul for eternity. In which, to obtain the protection of the glorious mother of God, he visited her image at Buntzel, which had been placed there by the apostles of the Slavonians, SS. Cyril and Methodius, and is a place of great devotion among the Bohemians. He was returning home in the evening, after having poured forth his soul in most fervent prayer in that holy place, when the emperor, looking out at a window of his palace, saw him pass alone in the streets of Prague. The sight of the holy man renewed his indignation and sacrilegious curiosity, and ordering him to be immediately brought in to him, he fiercely bade him choose either to reveal the confessions of the empress, or to die. The saint made no answer, but by his silence and the steadiness of his countenance, gave him sufficiently to understand, that he was not to be moved, and, by bowing his head, expressed his readiness to die. At which the emperor cried out in his fury: "Take away this man, and throw him into the river as soon as it shall be dark, that his execution may not be known by the people." The barbarous order was executed, and after some hours which the martyr employed in preparing himself for his sacrifice, he was thrown off the bridge which joins the great and little Prague, into the river Muldaw, with his hands and feet tied, on the vigil of the Ascension, the 16th of May 1383. The martyr was no sooner stifled in the waters, but a heavenly light appeared over his body floating on the river, and drew many to the banks. The empress ran in to the emperor, not knowing what had happened, and inquired what was the occasion of the lights which she saw on the river. The tyrant struck at the news fled in a hurry like a man distracted to a country house, forbidding any one to follow him. The morning discovered the villainy, and the executioners betrayed the secret. The whole city flocked to the place; the canons of the cathedral went in procession, took up the body with great honour, and carried it into the church of the Holy Cross of the Penitents, which was the next to the place where the body was found. Every one resorted thither to kiss the hands and feet of the glorious martyr, to recommend himself to his prayers, and to procure, if possible, some relick of his clothes, or what else had belonged to him. The emperor, being informed of this, sent an order to the religious Penitents to hinder any tumults in their church, and secretly to remove the body. They obeyed; but the treasure was discovered, and as soon as the canons had made every thing ready for its magnificent reception in the cathedral, it was conveyed thither with the utmost pomp by the clergy and whole city, and interred with this epitaph, which is yet read engraved on a stone upon his tomb: Under this stone lies the body of the most venerable and most glorious Thaumaturgus, JOHN NEPOMUCEN, doctor, canon of this church, and confessor of the empress, who, because he had faithfully kept the seal of confession, was cruelly tormented and thrown from the bridge of Prague into the river Muldaw, by the orders of WENCESLAS IV. emperor and king of Bohemia; son of Charles IV. 1383. Many miraculous cures of the sick under the most desperate disorders, during the translation and interment of his reliqs, and at his tomb, through his intercession, were public testimonies of his favour with God. The empress after this accident led a weak languishing life till the year 1387, when she closed it in a holy and happy death. The emperor staid some months in the castle of Zebrac, some leagues from Prague, hardening himself against the voices of heaven, fearing at first a sedition of the people: but religion taught the virtuous part their duty to their sovereign. Seeing therefore the things remain quiet in the city, he returned to it, and wallowed in his former slothful voluptuous life. But he soon felt that the punishment of a notorious sinner follows close upon his crime. The empire was torn with civil wars in all its parts. The Switzers revolting from Albert of Austria, set up their commonwealth without opposition: the emperor himself sold to John Galeas the dutchy of Milan for one hundred thousand florins, and for money alienated many others of the richest provinces, one after another. The princes and states, in the very year 1383, sent to intreat the tyrant to leave Bohemia and reside in the empire, to put a stop to the growing evils. He laughed at the deputies, and said, if there were any malecontents among them, it was their duty to come to him. The states and princes of the empire at length entered into a general confederaey at Mentz, and deposed him from the imperial throne in 1400; and meeting at Lauenstein in the archbishopric of Triers, chose first Frederick duke of Brunswic and Lunenbourg, and he dying in a few days, substituted Robert or Rupert of Bavaria, count palatine of the Rhine. Wenceslas, drowned in debaucheries, seemed insensible at this affront. The nobility of Bohemia, by the advice of his brother Sigismund king of Hungary, confined him twice; but he found means to escape, and died of an apoplexy, without having time, in appearance, to think of repentance. This indolence fortified the Hussite heresy, broached in his reign by John Huss rector of the university, and his disciple Jerom of Prague, which for above one hundred years filled the kingdom with civil wars, bloodshed, plunder, sacrileges, the ruin of families, and every other calamity.

The tomb of the saint continued illustrious for frequent miracles, and was protected by a wonderful providence from profanations which were often attempted by the Hussites, and again by the Calvinists in 1618, in the wars of Frederic the elector palatine. On that occasion, several officers and workmen, who set themselves to demolish the tomb of the saint, were deterred by visible judgments, and some by sudden death upon the spot, which was the misfortune, among others, of a certain English gentleman. The complete victory by which the imperialists, under the command of the duke of Bavaria, under the walls of Prague, in 1620, recovered this kingdom, is ascribed to the intercession of this holy martyr; who, as many attested, was seen appearing in glory with other patrons, by the guards, in the cathedral, the night before the battle, and whose protection the imperial army had earnestly implored: from which circumstance the illustrious house of Austria has shewn a particular devotion to his memory. The emperors Ferdinand II. and III. solicited his canonization, which was at length procured by Charles VI. In 1729, on the 14th of April, the saint's tomb was opened where the body had lain 330 years. The flesh was consumed, but the bones entire and perfectly joined together, with the marks of his fall into the river behind his head, and on his shoulders. His tongue alone was found fresh and free from corruption, as if the saint had but just expired. The saint had been honoured as a martyr from the time of his death in Bohemia; but to make his veneration more authentic and universal, his canonization was demanded, and several new miracles were juridically approved at Prague and Rome. Innocent XIII. confirmed his immemorial veneration, by a decree equivalent to a beatification; and the bull of his solemn canonization was published by Benedict XIII. in 1729. A narrative of many miracles wrought by his intercession may be read at the end of his life; as the wonderful preservation of the city of Nepomuc from the plague in 1680: the cure of various distempers in persons despaired of by the physicians: the deliverance of many from imminent dangers, and the protection of the innocence of many falsely accused. The count of Althan, afterwards archbishop of Bari, in the fall of a balcony in the palace of constable Colonna at Rome, was saved by St John appearing in a vision, whose intercession he invoked aloud. Cardinal Michael Frederic Althan, viceroy of Naples, was cured of a paralytic disorder, by which he had entirely lost the use of one arm, and of a complication of several other distempers, the moment he began to address his prayer to St John on his festival, in the Minims church. Pope Benedict XIII. dedicated an altar under the invocation of St John Nepomucen in the Lateran basilic.

In the sacrament of penance so indispensable is the law of secrecy, and so far does it extend, that the minister is bound, by all laws, so much to be upon his guard in this respect, that he may say with an ancient writer (a) "What I know by confession, I know less than what I do not know at all." St John Climacus remarks, that a special providence watches over the fidelity of this sacred seal: "For," says he, "it is unheard of that sins disclosed by confession should be divulged, lest others should be deterred from confessing, and all hope of health be cut off." (1) Without this indispensable secrecy the very precept and obligation ceases. (2) And this law is expedient also to the public weal; for by it the minister will often draw sinners from dangerous designs, which otherwise could never come to his knowledge, as F. Cotton shewed to the entire satisfaction of Henry IV. of France.

(1) S. John Clim. Ep. ad Paston. c. 13. (2) See Suarez in 3. p. disp. 23. Sect. 2. and others,

(a) Quæ per confessionem scio minus scio quam quæ nescio. S. Aug. vel signis alius Serm. 10. ad Frat. in Eremo, T. 6. Append. p. 336

ON THE SAME DAY.

St SIMON STOCK, C. He was descended of a good family in Kent. From his infancy he turned all his thoughts and affections to attain to the most perfect love of God, and studied to devote all his moments to this glorious pursuit. In this earnest desire in the twelfth year of his age he retired into a wilderness, and chose for his dwelling a great hollow oak tree; whence the surname of Stock was given him. Whilst he here mortified his flesh with fasting and other severities, he nourished his soul with spiritual dainties in continual prayer. His drink was only water; and he never touched any other food but herbs, roots, and wild apples. Whilst he led this course of life, he was invited by a divine revelation to embrace the rule of certain religious men who were coming from Palestine into England. Albert, the holy patriarch of Jerusalem, having given a written rule to the Carmelite friars about the year 1205, some brothers of this Order were soon after brought over from mount Carmel by John lord Vescy, and Richard lord Gray of Codnor, when they returned from the Holy Land. These noblemen some time after settled them, the latter in the wood of Aylsford near Rochester, in Kent, the former in the forest of Holme, near Alnwick, in Northumberland; which houses continued the two most famous convents of this Order in England till their dissolution in the 33d year of the reign of Henry VIII. But we are assured by Bale, who before his apostasy was himself a friar of the English province of this Order, (1) and by Lambert (2) and Weaver (3) in their accurate descriptions of the Antiquities of Kent, that the first or most ancient convent of these friars in England was that at Newenden in Kent, which was founded for them by Sir Thomas Archer or Fitz-Aucher, whose family flourished for many centuries upon that manor. The first arrival of these friars in England is placed in the annals of the Order, quoted by F. Cosmas de Villiers, (4) in 1212. (a) Simon, who had then lived a recluse twenty years, imitating the Macariuses and Arseniuses in the most heroic practices of penance and contemplation, was much affected with the devotion of these servants of God to the blessed Virgin; their edifying deportment, and their eremitical austere institute, and joined their holy company before the end of the year 1212. After his admission he was sent to Oxford to finish his studies; and, having run through his academical course, he returned to his convent, where so bright was the example of his piety, that the virtue of the rest seemed to suffer an eclipse by the extraordinary lustre of his sanctity. Such was his reputation that in 1215 Brocard, prior of mount Carmel, and general of the Order, appointed him vicar general, with full power over all the Western provinces. Many clamours being raised against this institute, St Simon repaired to Rome in 1226, and obtained from pope Honorius III. a confirmation of the rule given to this Order by Albertus; and another from Gregory IX. in 1229. Some years after St Simon paid a visit to his brethren on mount Carmel, and remained six years in Palestine, where in 1237 he assisted at the general chapter of the Order held by Alanus, the fifth general. In this assembly it was decreed, that the greatest part of the brethren should pass into Europe, their settlements in the East being continually disturbed by the persecutions, oppression, or threats, of the Saracens. In 1240 many were sent to England, and in 1244. Alanus himself with St Simon, having nominated Hilariion his vicar on mount Carmel, and in Palestine, followed them thither, there being already five monasteries of the Order erected in this island

(1) Bale, Cent. xii. 20. (2) p. 139. (3) p. 139.

(4) Bibliotheca Carmelitana, ed. Anno 1752, T. 2. p. 750.

(a) Our English monastic historians say in 1240. So Dodsworth (in his Extracts concerning this Order in England) Dugdale in his Warwickshire, 1st edition, p. 117: in the new edition with notes in 1730 we read by mistake 12 0 for 1240. Bp. Tanner (Not. Monast. p. 395. and pref. p. xxxiii.) Leland (de Scriptor. p. 293.) Lambart, Weaver, &c. But confound the first coming of these friars with the second, when, to shun the persecution of the Saracens, they forsook Palestine. Dugdale (Baçon.) calls the lord Vescy or Vesey in 1240, William, not John.

In a general chapter held at Aylesford in 1245, Alanus resigning his dignity, St Simon was chosen the sixth general, and in the same year procured a new confirmation of the rule by pope Innocent IV. who at the saint's request received this Order under the special protection of the Holy See in 1251. St Simon established houses in most parts of Europe; but this institute flourished no where with so great splendor and edification as in England, and continued so to do for several ages, as the Annals of the Order take notice. St Simon, soon after he was promoted to the dignity of general, instituted the confraternity of the Scapular to unite the devout clients of the Blessed Virgin in certain regular exercises of religion and piety. Several Carmelite writers assure us that he was admonished by the Mother of God in a vision, with which he was favoured on the 16th of July, to establish this devotion. (b) This confraternity has been approved, and favoured with many privileges by several popes. (5) The rules prescribe, without any obligation or precept, that the members wear a little scapular, at least secretly, as the symbol of the Order, and that they recite every day the office of our Lady, or the office of the church; or, if they cannot read, seven times the Pater, Ave, and Gloria Patri, in lieu of the seven canonical hours; and lastly, that they abstain from flesh-meat on Wednesdays, Fridays and Saturdays; or, if this cannot be done, that they double for each of these days the seven Paters, &c. St Simon cured several sick persons by giving them the scapular; the reputation of which miracles moved Edward I. king of England, St Lewis of France, and many others, to enrol their names in this confraternity.

(5) See the bulls of Pius V. Clement VIII. Paul V. Clement X. &c.

(b) From the silence of F. Philip Biboti, a Spanish Carmelite friar, who died in 1391, and wrote in ten books an history of the Institution of this Order, called Speculum Ordinis Carmelitani; also Lives of Illustrious men of this Order: Likewise from the silence of Thomas Waldensis (who defended this Order against Wicklif, T. 3. c. 75. 89. and 92.) and others, Launoy, in an express dissertation in 1653, contested the authenticity of this vision: but is refuted by F. Cosmas de Villiers (Bibl. Carmel. T. 2. p. 753.) and pope Benedict XIV. (De Canoniz. T. 4. part. 2. c. 9. p. 74. 75.) upon the testimonies of several ancient writers of this Order, collected by Theophilus Raynaudus, in his Scapulare Marianum, Op. F. 7. especially of Peter Swaynton, from Norfolk, the saint's companion and director for many years, and the first author of his life.

St Simon governed the Order with great sanctity and prudence during twenty years, and propagated it exceedingly from England over all Europe; (c) being himself famous for his eminent virtue, and a great gift of miracles and prophecy. He wrote several hymns and decrees for his Order, and several other useful things for its service, says Leland. At length, in the hundredth year of his age, having a call to France, he sailed to Bourdeaux, where God put an end to his labours some months after his arrival in 1265, on the 16th of July. He was buried in the cathedral of that city, and was honoured among the saints soon after his death. Pope Nicholas III. granted an office to be celebrated in his honour at Bourdeaux on the 16th of May: which Paul V. extended to the whole Order. See his authentic life written soon after his death, also Stevens's Monast. Anglic. T. 2. p. 159. 160. Leland de Script. Brit. T. 2. c. 277. p. 294. Papebroke, T. 3. Maij. p. 653. Newcourt's Repertorium (on the Carmelite friars) vol. 1. p. 566. Weaver, p. 139. Fuller, b. 6. p. 271. Dugdale's Warwickshire, p. 186. ed. 1730. F. Cosmas de Villiers a S. Philippo, Bibl. Carmel. T. 2. p. 750.

St UBALDUS, Bishop of Gubio. He was born of a noble family at Gubio, a city of the Ecclesiastical State near the marquisate of Ancona. He had his education in the seminary of SS. Marian and James, and made great progress in his studies both profane and sacred; but the holy scriptures, those springs of living waters, were his chief delight. Many honourable matches were proposed to him by his friends; but he rejected all such offers, and made a vow of celibacy. His ardour in the perfect practice of virtue strengthened him against the bad example of many tepid companions. However, not approving certain irregularities which he saw tolerated among them, he exchanged this house for the seminary of St Secundus, where he finished his studies. The bishop of Gubio made him prior of his cathedral, that he might reform several abuses in the behaviour of the canons. Ubaldus prepared himself for this important work by fasting, prayers, and tears, by which he hoped to engage the divine assistance. He easily prevailed on three of his canons who were the best disposed, to join with him in his exercises and rules of life: and their example soon began to work upon the rest. The saint visited a community of regular canons, esteemed for their regularity and sanctity, which had been established by Peter de Honestis, a person of singular piety, in the territory of Ravenna. He staid there three months, in order to take an exact view of the discipline of the house; and he carried its rule back with him to Gubio, and in a short time got it received by the whole chapter, to render their reformation complete. After some years, their house and cloister being burnt down, Ubaldus looked upon this as a favourable opportunity of leaving his post, and retiring into some desert. In this view he made his way to that of Font-Avellano, where he found Peter of Rimini, to whom he communicated his design of quitting the world. That great servant of God opposed the motion as a dangerous temptation, and exhorted him to return to his former vocation in which God had fixed him for the good of others. The saint therefore returned to Gubio, re-built the cloisters, and rendered his chapter more flourishing than it had ever been, to the great edification of the whole country. In 1126, St Ubaldus was unanimously chosen bishop of Perugia, but he hid himself in the country; so that the deputies of that city were not able to find him; and when they were departed he went to Rome, threw himself at the feet of Pope Honorius II. and with many tears begged that he might be excused; employing all the interest he had in the world to obtain the favour he desired. Honorius granted his request; but the see of Gubio becoming vacant two years after, the pope directed the clergy of that city to proceed to his election according to the forms prescribed by the canons; in consequence of which his Holiness consecrated him with his own hands in the beginning of the year 1129. The new bishop made it his whole business to adorn the dignity of his station with all the virtues of a true successor of the apostles. He practised a perpetual mortification of all his senses, and lived dead to all the enjoyments of the world: he was indefatigable both in the exercise of penance, and in the labours of his ministry, frugal, humble, sincere, and full of compassion for all the world. But mildness and patience, by which he appeared insensible to injuries and affronts, was one of the brightest parts of his character. Once it happened, that, in repairing the wall of the city, the workmen encroached upon his vineyard. The bishop mildly put them in mind of it, and desired them to forbear. The overseer of the work, moved with brutish fury, scornfully pushed him into a great heap of mortar. The good bishop got up all covered with lime and dirt, without making the least expostulation. The people demanded that the overseer, in punishment for the offence, should be banished, and his goods confiscated. The saint endeavoured to make it pass for an accident; but when that could not satisfy the people, who knew how it happened, he being desirous to deliver the man out of the hands of the magistrates, maintained that the cognisance of the misdemeanor belonging to his own court, he would take care to do himself justice. The workman, stung with remorse, proffered to accept of any punishment the bishop should think proper to inflict on him, even though his life was to pay for the offence. The holy prelate, rising from his chair, went up to him, and told him, with a smiling countenance, that by way of satisfaction for the injury received, he insisted on his giving him a kiss of peace, as a token of a perfect reconciliation, and that he begged of God to pardon him that and all other offences. After which he saluted him.

(c) Bishop Tanner reckons about forty houses of the Carmelites or White Friars in England at the dissolution of abbeyes. Pref. to his Nostria Monast.

The saint often defended his flock in public dangers. Hearing one day that a sedition was raised in one of the streets, wherein some were wounded, others killed, he ran out, and venturing himself between the combatants, fell down amidst their naked swords. The mutineers, thinking him dead, all threw away their weapons, running to take him up, and every one condemned himself as the murderer of their holy bishop. Then the saint, thanking God that the tumult was appeased, dispelled their fears by assuring them that he had received no hurt. The emperor Frederic Barbarossa, in his cruel wars in Italy, having taken and plundered Spoleto, threatened to do the like by Gubbio. Ubaldus, moved by a more than fatherly tenderness for his flock, met the emperor on the road, and, on his first interview, softened the heart of that tyrant to compassion, and obtained of him the safety of his people. The two last years of his life, he laboured under a complication of painful distempers, which he bore with the patience of a saint. On Easter-day in 1160, his devotion to the glorious mystery of that festival made him forget his infirm condition, get up, say mass, and give the people a discourse on eternal life. From the cathedral he would be carried to the church of St Laurence, near which he had an apartment. He continued there till the feast of the ascension in retirement, to prepare himself for death. After that, he was removed into his own house, where he repeated his last instructions to his clergy and people who came to visit him, and beg his last blessing. Having received the rites of the church, he expired on the 16th of May 1160. The people from all the neighbouring provinces attended his funeral in crowds, and were eye-witnesses of the many miracles God performed at his tomb. So tender was the devotion which this spectacle excited in every one, that animosities and dissensions over the whole country were extinguished, and a most wonderful spirit of charity was infused into all hearts. Injuries were forgotten, and cities, which had been long at variance, renewed the most sincere league of friendship. St Ubaldus had been favoured with the miraculous gift of curing diseases in his life-time, which he performed by the sign of the cross and prayer: yet when a certain blind man addressed himself to him to be cured, the bishop told him that his corporal sight would be prejudicial to his soul, and that his temporal blindness would be recompensed with the clear vision of God in heaven for all eternity: at which the good man was so well satisfied, that he no longer desired to be cured. St Ubaldus was canonized by pope Celestine III. in 1192. See his accurate life written by Tebald, his successor, in the Acta Sanctorum.

St HONORATUS, in French Honorè, bishop of Amiens, C. He was a native of Ponthieu, and bishop of Amiens about the year 660. In 1204 a church was built at Paris in his honour, by a private gentleman named Renold Cherins, who four years after endowed it with a foundation for several canonries, the number of which has been since augmented. This collegiate church became very famous. It is also a small parish. (1) St Honoratus is titular saint of a Chartreuse at Abbeville, which was founded in 1306. See Gallia Christ. Nova, T. 10. p. 1153. Le Fevre, Calendr. de l'Egl. de Paris ad 16. Majj. &c.

St ABDJESUS or HEBEDJESUS, B. M. The Greek Menology commemorates this holy bishop of Cascar in Chaldæa, on the 16th of May, on which day he suffered martyrdom under king Isdegerdes with sixteen priests, nine deacons, six monks, and seven virgins. See Le Quien, Oriens Christ. T. 2. p. 1163.

St ABDAS, also Bishop of Cascar, in the sixty-sixth year of the reign of Sapor, was crowned with martyrdom at Ledan, in the country of the Huzites, with twenty-eight companions, on Friday, the 15th day of Yar, which corresponds in part to our May. See Sozomen, l. 2. c. 11. Jos. Assemani, Bibl. Orien. T. 3. p. 192.

(1) See Le Fevre, Calendrier Historique de l'Eglise de Paris, p. 146. Piganiol Descript. de Paris, &c.

St BRENDAN the Elder, Abbot of Cluain-fearta, or Clonfert, upon the river Shannon. He was son of Findloge, and a disciple of St Finian at Clonard. Passing afterward into Wales, he lived some time under the discipline of St Gildas, also several years in the abbey of Llan-carven in Glamorganshire. He built in Britain the monastery of Ailech, and another church in a territory called Heth. Returning into Ireland, he founded there several schools and monasteries, the chief of which was that of Cluain-fearta.(a) He wrote a monastic rule, which was long famous in Ireland, taught some time at Ros-carbre, and died at Enach-duin, a monastery which he had built for his sister Briga, in Connaught. He is named in the Roman martyrology on the 16th of May, on which he passed to bliss in the year 578, in the 94th year of his age. His life, extant in MS. in the Cottonian Library, is filled with apocryphal relations of miracles. See Usher's Antiq. p. 271. 471. 494. Smith, Natural and Civil history of Kerry, p. 412. and 68.

(a) Two great monasteries in Ireland, the heads of their respective Orders, had the same name of Cluain-fearta: this on the Shannon in Connaught, in the county of Galway, where now is the episcopal see of Clonfert: the other founded by St Luon or Molua in Leinster, called from him Cluain-fearta-Molua. Cluain in the old Irish language signifies a retired or hidden place; and Fearta wonders or miracles.

M A Y XVII.

ST PASCHAL BAYLON, C.

From his two lives, one written by John Ximenes, his companion; the other in order to his canonization. See another monument in Papebroke, T. 4. Maij. p. 48. 132.

A. D. 1592.

THE state of poverty was honoured by the choice of our blessed Redeemer, and had been favoured with his special blessing. It removes men from many dangers and temptations, and furnishes them with perpetual occasions for the exercise of self-denial, patience, penance, resignation to the divine will, and every other heroic Christian virtue; yet these great means of salvation are, by many, through ignorance, impatience, and inordinate desires, often perverted into occasions of their temporal and eternal misery. Happy are they who, by making a right use of the spiritual advantages which this state, so dear to our divine Redeemer, offers them, procure to themselves present peace, joy, and every solid good; and make every circumstance of that condition in which providence hath placed them, a step to perfect virtue, and to everlasting happiness. This in an eminent degree was the privilege of St Paschal Baylon. He was born in 1540, at Torre-Hermosa, a small country town in the kingdom of Arragon. His parents were day-labourers, and very virtuous; and to their example our saint was greatly indebted for the spirit of piety and devotion, which he seemed to have sucked in with his mother's milk. Their circumstances were too narrow to afford his being sent to school; but the pious child, out of an earnest desire of attaining to so great a means of instruction, carried a book with him into the fields, where he watched the sheep, and desired those that he met to teach him the letters; and thus, in a short time, being yet very young, he learned to read. This advantage he made use of only to improve his soul in devotion and piety : books of amusement he never would look into ; but the lives of the saints, and above all, meditations on the life of Christ, were his chiefest delight. He loved nothing but what was serious, and of solid advantage, at a time of life in which many seem scarce susceptible of such impressions. When he was of a proper age, he engaged with a master to keep his flocks as under shepherd : he was delighted with the innocent and quiet life his state permitted him to lead. That solitary life had charms for him. Whatever he saw was to him an object of faith and devotion. He read continually in the great book of nature, and from every object raised his soul to God, whom he contemplated and praised in all his works. Besides external objects, he had almost continually a spiritual book in his hands, which served to instruct and to inflame his soul in the love and practice of virtue. His master, who was a person of singular piety, was charmed with his edifying conduct, and made him an offer to adopt him for his son, and to make him his heir. But Paschal, who desired only the goods of another life, was afraid that those of this world would prove to him an incumbrance ; he therefore modestly declined the favour, desiring always to remain in his humble state, as being more conformable to that which Christ chose for himself on earth, who came not into the world to be served, but to serve. He was often discovered praying on his knees under some tree, whilst his flocks were browsing on the hills. It was by this secret entertainment of his soul with God, in the most profound humility, and perfect purity of his affections, that he acquired a most sublime science and experience in spiritual things, at which those who were the most advanced were struck with admiration. He could truly say with David : Blessed is he whom thou thyself shalt instruct, O Lord. (1) He spoke of God and of virtue with an inimitable unction and experimental light, and with sentiments which the Holy Ghost alone forms in souls which are perfectly disengaged from earthly things, and replenished with his heavenly fire. Often was he seen ravished in holy prayer; and frequently was not able to conceal from the eyes of men the vehement ardour of the divine love, with which his soul melted in an excess of heavenly sweetness. He felt in himself, what many servants of God assure us of, that, "the consolation which the Holy Ghost frequently infuses into pious souls, is greater than all the pleasures of the world together, could they be enjoyed by one man. It makes the heart to dissolve and melt through excess of joy, under which it is unable to contain itself." (2) In these sentiments did this servant of God sing with David: My soul shall rejoice in the Lord, and shall be delighted in his salvation. All my bones shall say, O Lord, who is like to thee! (3) The reward of virtue is reserved for heaven: but some comforts are not denied during the present time of trial. Even in this vale of tears, God will make its desert as a place of pleasure; and its wilderness as the garden of the Lord. Joy and gladness shall be found in it, thanksgiving and the voice of praise. Isaias, li. 3. It is sufficiently understood, that the saint did not receive these heavenly comforts without severe interior trials, and a constant practice of self-denial, by which his heart was crucified to the world. The dew of extraordinary spiritual comforts never falls on unmortified souls, which seek the delights of this world. St Paschal in his poverty joined alms with his continual prayer; and not having any other means to relieve the poor, always gave them a good part of his own dinner which was sent him into the fields.

(1) Psal. xciii. 12.

How great soever his love was for his profession, he found however several difficulties in it which made him think of leaving it. He was not able, notwithstanding all the care he could take, to hinder a flock of goats he had in charge from sometimes trespassing on another's ground. This occasioned his giving over the inspection of that flock. But he found other troubles in taking care of other cattle. Some of his companions, not having the same piety with himself,

(2) Ruisbroch. Spir. Nupt. l. 2. c. 19. (3) Psal. xxxiv.

were but too much addicted to cursing, quarrelling, and fighting; nor were they to be reclaimed by his gentle rebukes on these accounts. He was therefore determined to leave them, not to participate in their crimes. And to learn the will of God in this important choice of a state of life, in which he might most faithfully serve him; he redoubled his prayers, fasts and other austerities. After some time spent in this manner, he determined to become a religious man. Those to whom he first disclosed his inclination to a religious state, pointed out to him several convents richly endowed. But that circumstance alone was enough to disgust him; and his answer was: "I was born poor, and I am resolved to live and die in poverty and penance." Being at that time twenty years of age, he left his master, his friends and his country; and went into the kingdom of Valencia, where was an austere convent of barefoot reformed Franciscans, called Soccolans, which stood in a desert solitude, but at no great distance from the town of Montfort. He addressed himself to the fathers of this house for spiritual advice; and in the mean time he entered into the service of certain farmers in the neighbourhood to keep their sheep. He continued here his penitential and retired life in assiduous prayer, and was known in the whole country by the name of the Holy Shepherd. To sequester himself from the world, he made the more haste to petition for the habit of a lay brother in the house above-mentioned; and was admitted in 1564. The fathers desired to persuade him to enter himself among the clerks, or those who aspired to holy orders, and sing the divine office in the choir; but they were obliged to yield to his humility, and admit him among the lay-brothers of the community. He was not only a fervent novice, which we often see, but also a most fervent religious man, always advancing, and never losing ground. Though his rule was most austere, he added continually to its severity, but always with simplicity of heart, without the least attachment to his own will: and whenever he was admonished of any excess in his practices of mortifica-

on, he most readily confined himself to the letter of his rule. The meanest employments always gave him the highest satisfaction. Whenever he changed convents, according to the custom of his Order, the better to prevent any secret attachments of the heart, he never complained of any thing; nor so much as said that he found any thing in one house more agreeable than in another; because, being entirely dead to himself, he every where sought only God. He never allowed himself a moment of repose between the church and cloister duties, and his work; nor did his labour interrupt his prayer. He had never more than one habit, and that always thread-bare. He walked without sandals in the snows and in the roughest roads. He accommodated himself to all places and seasons, and was always content, cheerful, mild, affable and full of respect for all. He thought himself honoured, if employed in any painful and low office to serve any one.

The general of the Order happening to be at Paris, Paschal was sent thither to him about some necessary business of his province. Many of the cities through which he was to pass in France, were in the hands of the Huguenots, who were then in arms. Yet he offered himself to a martyrdom of obedience, travelled in his habit, and without so much as sandals on his feet; was often pursued by the Huguenots with sticks and stones, and received a wound on one shoulder, of which he remained lame as long as he lived. He was twice taken for a spy; but God delivered him out of all dangers. On the very day on which he arrived at his convent from this tedious journey, he went out to his work and other duties as usual. He never spoke of any thing that had happened to him in his journey unless asked: and then was careful to suppress whatever might reflect on him the least honour or praise. He had a singular devotion to the Mother of God, whose intercession he never ceased to implore that he might be preserved from sin. The holy sacrament of the altar was the object of his most tender devotion: also the passion of our divine Redeemer. He spent, especially towards the end of his life, a considerable part of the night at the foot of the altar on his knees, or prostrate on the ground. In prayer he was often favoured with extasies and raptures. He died at Villa Reale near Valentia on the 17th of May, in 1592, being fifty-two years old. His corps was exposed three days, during which time the great multitudes which from all parts visited the church, were witnesses to many miracles by which God attested the sanctity of his servant. St Paschal was beatified by pope Paul V. in 1618, and canonized by Alexander VIII. in 1690.

If Christians in every station endeavoured with their whole strength continually to advance in virtue, the church would be filled with saints. But alas! though it be an undoubted maxim, that not to go on in a spiritual life is to fall back, "Nothing is more rare," says St Bernard, "than to find persons who always press forward. We see more converted from vice to virtue, than increase their fervour in virtue." This is something dreadful. The same father assigns two principal reasons. First, many who begin well, after some time grow again remiss in the exercises of mortification and prayer, and return to the amusements, pleasures and vanities of a worldly life. Secondly, others, who are regular and constant in exterior duties, neglect to watch over and cultivate their interior; so that some interior spiritual vice insinuates itself into their affections, and renders them an abomination in the eyes of God. "A man," says St Bernard, (4) "who gives himself up entirely to exterior exercises, without looking seriously into his own heart to see what passes there, imposes upon himself, imagining that he is something, whilst he is nothing. His eyes being always fixed on his exterior actions, he flatters himself that he goes on well, and neither sees nor feels the secret worm which gnaws and consumes his heart. He keeps all fasts, assists at all parts of the divine office, and fails in no exercise of piety or penance; yet God declares, His heart is far from me. He only employs his hands in fulfilling the precepts, and his heart is hard and dry. His duties are complied with by habit and a certain rotation : he omits not a single iota of all his exterior employments ; but whilst he strains at a gnat, he swallows a camel. In his heart he is a slave to self-will, and is a prey to avarice, vain-glory and ambition : one of other or all these vices together reign in his soul."

(4) St Bern. Serm. 2. in Cap. Jejunij.

ON THE SAME DAY.

St POSSIDIUS, B. C. He was a native of the proconsular Africa, and had his education under the great St Austin. In 397, he was chosen bishop of Calama, in Numidia, which diocese he found distracted by the factions both of heathens and Donatists. In 404, a party of the latter dragged him out of his house, beat him, and threatened his life. All the revenge he took of them was to obtain their pardon from the emperor. Four years after this, the idolaters, in a riotous festival, on the first of June, had the insolence to dance round the church, throw stones into it, and set it on fire, wounding several of the clergy, and killing one upon the spot. Nectarius, a principal person among the heathens, who had no share in this tumult, wrote to St Austin to beg him to intercede with the emperor for the pardon of the rioters, observing to him that it is the duty of Christian pastors to employ themselves in works of mercy and peace. By the interposition of Possidius, their punishment was only an order which the emperor sent for the breaking down their idols, with a prohibition of their abominable festivals and sacrifices. When the relicks of St Stephen were brought into Africa, about the year 410, our holy bishop was careful to enrich Calama with a portion of them, by which several miracles were there wrought, as St Austin informs us. (1) St Possidius was, doubtless, one of those bishops who established among the clergy of their cathedrals a monastic regularity, in imitation of St Austin, and according to the rule by him instituted, as our saint mentions in the life of that great doctor: and St Austin speaks of the poor religious men of Calama. The Vandals passed over from Spain into Africa with an army of fourscore thousand veteran soldiers, long accustomed to blood and plunder; and made themselves in a short time masters of Mauritania, Numidia, and the proconsular province, except the strong fortresses of Carthage, Cirta and Hippo. They pillaged the whole country and the towns which lay in their way; and among others Calama, which seems to have never since lifted up its head. St Possidius took refuge, in Hippo, with his dear master St Austin, who soon after died in his arms in 430, during the siege of that city, which some time after fell into the hands of the barbarians. These were severe trials to our saint, who from that time lived in perpetual banishment from his flock. He wrote the life of St Austin, with a catalogue of his works. The Italians say, that from Africa he came into Italy, and died at Mirandola. That city and Rhegio in Apulia honour him as patron. The regular canons keep his festival on the 17th of May, and regard him as one of the most illustrious fathers of their Order. See the life and works of St Austin, and Papebroke, who shews that it is a mistake to confound St Possidius with Possidonus, another African bishop, sometimes mentioned with him in the same councils. T. 4. Maij. p. 27. See also Ceiller, T. 12. p. 261.

(1) L. 22. de Civit. c. 8.

St MADEN, or MADERN, C. honoured in Brittany, where he is patron of a parish in the diocese of St Malo; and probably of another in the same diocese, called Plu-Mauden, as F. Lobineau takes notice. (1) His name was also in the highest veneration in Cornwall, where he lived and died in an hermitage near the Land's End, where a chapel which bore his name was long famous for pilgrimages and miracles.

Among the miracles ascribed to St Madern, that which follows was attested by Dr Joseph Hall, the Protestant bishop of Exeter, who in his last visitation of this diocese, before he was translated to the see of Norwich in 1641, made a juridical and strict inquiry into all the circumstances of this fact, and authentically declared the evidence of the miracle to be incontestable. The strong prejudices and inveterate hatred against the catholic religion, which he discovers in his Dissuasive from Popery to W. D. revolted, (viz. a late convert to the catholic faith) and in many other parts of his voluminous writings, and of which the history of his whole life is a constant proof, render his testimony the more unexceptionable. In his treatise, On the Invisible World (2) he speaks of a miraculous cure wrought at St Madern's well, in the following words: "The commerce that we have with the good spirits is not now discerned by the eye, but is like themselves spiritual. Yet not so, but that even in bodily occasions we have many times insensible helps from them; in such manner as that by the effects we can boldly say: Here hath been an angel, though we see him not. Of this kind was that (no less than miraculous) cure which at St Madern's in Cornwall was wrought upon a poor cripple, John Trelille, whereof (besides the attestation of many hundreds of neighbours) I took a strict and personal examination in that last visitation which I either did or ever shall hold. This man, that for sixteen years together was fain to walk upon his hands, by reason of the close contraction of the sinews of his legs, (upon three admonitions in a dream to wash in that well) was suddenly so restored to his limbs, that I saw him able to walk and get his own maintenance. I found here was neither art nor collusion: the thing done, the author invisible."

(1) Hist. des Saints de la Bretagne, p. 11.

Another writer, a curious searcher into nature, and of great learning, who lived in that country about the same time, gives a fuller account of the same miraculous cure, as follows, (3) "I will relate one miracle more done in our own country, to the great wonder of the neighbouring inhabitants, but a few years ago, viz. about the year 1640. The process of the business was told the king when at Oxford, which he caused to be further examined. It was this: A certain boy of twelve years old, called John Trefille, in the county of Cornwall, not far from the Land's end, as they were playing at foot-ball, snatching up the ball ran away with it; whereupon a girl in anger struck him with a thick stick on the back bone, and so bruised or broke it, that for sixteen years after he was forced to go creeping on the ground. In this condition he arrived to the twenty-eighth year of his age, when he dreamed that if he did but bathe in St Madern's well, or in the stream running from it, he should recover his former strength and health. This is a place in Cornwall from the remains of ancient devotion still frequented by Protestants on the Thursdays in May, and especially on the feast of Corpus Christi; near to which well is a chapel dedicated to St Madern, where is yet an altar, and right against it a grassy hillock (made every year anew by the country people) which they call St Madern's bed. The chapel roof is quite decayed; but a kind of thorn of itself shooting forth of the old walls, so extends its boughs that it covers the whole chapel, and supplies as it were a roof. On a Thursday in May, assisted by one Periman his neighbour, entertaining great hopes from his dream, thither he crept, and lying before the altar, and praying very fervently that he might regain his health and the strength of his limbs, he washed his whole body in the stream that flowed from the well, and ran through the chapel: after which having slept about an hour and half on St Madern's bed, through the extremity of pain he felt in his nerves and arteries, he began to cry out, and his companion helping and lifting him up, he perceived his hams and joints somewhat extended, and himself become stronger, insomuch that partly with his feet, partly with his hands, he went much more erect than before. Before the following Thursday he got two crutches, resting on which he could make a shift to walk, which before he could not do. And coming to the chapel as before, after having bathed himself, he slept on the same bed, and awaking found himself much stronger and more upright: and so leaving one crutch in the chapel, he went home with the other. The third Thursday he returned to the chapel, and bathed as before, slept, and when he awoke, rose up quite cured; yea grew so strong, that he wrought day-labour among other hired servants; and four years after listed himself a soldier in the king's army, where he behaved himself with great stoutness both of mind and body: at length in 1644 he was slain at Lime in Dorsetshire." The author takes notice that Thursday and Friday were the days chosen out of devotion to the Blessed Eucharist and the Passion of Christ.

(2) Bp. Hall, on the Invis. World, l. ii. sect. 8. (3) Ex. R. P. Francisci Coventr. Paralipom. Philosoph. c. 4. p. 68. Referam adhuc unum miraculum in patria nostrâ paucis abhinc annis, &c.

St MAW, C. This name in the Cornish language signifies a Boy. (1) He was a native of Ireland, and came young into Cornwall that he might live to God alone in the closest solitude, in the practice of the most austere penance and the exercises of divine prayer. His hermitage was on the sea-coast near the spacious harbour of Falmouth. The place is still called St Mawes, in Latin S. Mauditi Castrum, where a church, and in the church-yard a chair of solid stone, and a miraculous or holy well, still bear his name. See Leland's Itiner. vol. ix. p. 79. vol. iii. fol 13. alias 19. where he writes that this saint had been a bishop in Britain, and was painted as a school-master. (a)

(1) See Borlase's Cornish vocabulary, V. Maw.

(a) Leland Itiner. vol. iii. fol. 35. alias 49. in his account of St Sativola, V. who was born at Exeter, beheaded by Feniseca through the contrivance of her step-mother, and honoured as titular saint of a church in Cornwall, quotes on these saints the Legends of the saints abridged for the use of the church of Exeter, by bishop John of Grandison, in the year 1336, of whom he speaks at large, fol. 37. alias 53.

He mentions many places of great devotion in that county, as St Piran's alias Kenerin's, a sanctuary two miles from Gilling Creek. The church of St Budocus, an holy Irishman, who lived and died a recluse there. St Germoc's church three miles from St Michael's, with his chair and a holy well in the church-yard: the church of St Buriene, a holy Irish Virgin who lived there a recluse; to which king Athelstan granted the privilege of a sanctuary, and built there a famous college under her patronage and name. St Ide's island famous

St CATHAN, B. C. He flourished in the sixth or seventh century. His relicks in the isle of Bute were so famous in Scotland that the island was often called Kilcathen. (a) See Breviar. Aberd. and Scoti-chr.

St SILAVE or SILAN, B. C. He was an Irish monk, and abbot of the monastery of St Brendan. Being afterward ordained bishop, he governed his diocese with great zeal and charity. The latter part of his life he spent in Italy, where he was styled the Father of the Poor. He died at Lucca, in 1100, and was canonized by pope Lucius III. in 1183. See Colgan, in MSS. ad 17 Maij.

M A Y XVIII.

ST ERIC, KING OF SWEDEN, M.

See Israelis Erlandi liber de vitâ et miraculis S. Erici Regis, ex editione & cum notis Joan. Schefferi, in 8vo. Holmiæ. 1675. and Henschenius, T. 4. Maij. p. 186.

A. D. 1151.

ERIC (a) was descended of a most illustrious Swedish family; in his youth he laid a solid foundation of virtue and learning, and took to wife Christina daughter of Ingo IV. king of Sweden. Upon the death of king Smercher in 1141, he was, purely for his extraordinary virtues and qualifications, placed on the throne by election of the states, according to the ancient laws of that kingdom. His first care in that exalted and dangerous station, was to watch over

(a) Kil signifies a church or oratory, as Kilbraid, Kilpatrick &c.

(a) Eric, Erric and Henry, are in the northern nations the same name, which in the Teutonic language signifies Rich Lord. St. Eric was the ninth of that name, among the kings of Sweden.

mous for pilgrimages to her sepulchre. St Iâ's who was daughter to an Irish nobleman, and disciple of St Barr. She arrived here with many companions. Dinan, a great lord in Cornwall, built a church for her use, which since bears her name, in a peninsula and on the rock of Pendinas. St Mogun's church on Mogun Creek. St Geron's, St Juste's, St Carac's, &c. See the life of Kiaran on 5th March, his own soul. He treated his body with great severity, fasting and watching much, in order to keep his domestic enemy in due subjection to the spirit, and to fit himself for the holy exercises of heavenly contemplation and prayer, which were his chief delight. He was truly the father and the servant of all his people. With indefatigable application he himself administered to them justice, especially to the poor, to whose complaints his ears were always open, and whose grievances and oppressions he took care himself to redress. He often visited in person the poor that were sick, and relieved them with bountiful alms. Content with his own patrimony, he levied no taxes. He built churches, and by wholesome laws restrained the brutish and savage vices of his subjects. The frequent inroads of the idolatrous Finlanders upon his territories obliged him to take the field against them. He vanquished them in a great battle; but, after his victory, he wept bitterly at the sight of the dead bodies of his enemies which covered the field, because they had been slain unbaptized. When he had subdued Finland, he sent St Henry, bishop of Upsal, to preach the faith of Christ to that savage infidel nation, of which he may be styled the apostle. Among the subjects of this good king were certain sons of Belial, who made his piety the subject of their ridicule, being mostly obstinate idolaters. Magnus, son of the king of Denmark, blinded by ambitious views to the crown of Sweden, put himself at the head of these impious malecontents, and engaged them in a conspiracy to take away the life of their sovereign. The holy king was hearing mass on the day after the feast of the Ascension, when news was brought him, that the rebels were in arms, and on the march against him. He calmly answered: "Let us at least finish the sacrifice: the remainder of the festival I shall keep elsewhere." After mass he recommended his soul to God, made the sign of the cross, and, to spare the blood of the citizens who were ready to defend his life at the expence of their own, marched out alone before his guards. The conspirators rushed upon him, beat him down from his horse, and struck off his head with a thousand indignities in derision of his religion. His death happened on the eighteenth of May, 1151. God honoured his tomb with many miracles. It remains to this day at Upsal undefaced. St Eric was honoured as chief patron of the kingdom of Sweden, till the change of religion in the sixteenth century. He ordered the ancient laws and constitutions of the kingdom to be collected into one volume, which bears the title of king Eric's laws, or the Code of Uppland, highly respected in Sweden: it was confirmed in the thirteenth century, by the learned king Magnus Ladulas, who compiled and published in 1285 another code under the title of Gardsrætte.

All power and authority among men is derived from God, as Christ declared to Pilate, (1) and as the Wiseman often repeats. Whence St Paul teaches us, that he who resisteth power, resisteth the ordinance of God. (2) On no men doth he confer the least degree of jurisdiction, but with the most severe injunction and obligation, that they employ it according to his will, and in the first place for the advancement of his divine honour. Hence every father, master of a family, magistrate or king, is accountable to God for those under his charge, and will be condemned as a traitor at the last day, if he employs not all the means in his power that God may be known, praised, and faithfully served by them. This is the primary obligation of those whom God hath vested with authority. In the faithful discharge of this trust the glorious St Eric laid down his life.

(1) John xix.

(2) Rom. xiii. 2.

ST THEODOTUS, VINTNER, AND SEVEN VIRGINS, MARTYRS.

From their authentic acts, written by one Nilus an eye-witness, in Ruinart's Acta Sincera. p. 336. See Tillemont, and the English abridgment of these acts.

A. D. 303.

ST THEODOTUS was a citizen of Ancyra, the capital of Galatia. From his tender years he had been brought up in perfect sentiments of piety, by the care of a holy virgin called Thecusa. He was married, kept an inn, and sold wine; but what is very rare to be found in that profession, was just, abstemious, and zealous in the practice of all the duties of religion. In the flower of his age he despised riches and pleasures; made fasting, almsdeeds and prayer, his delight, and laid himself out in relieving the necessitous, comforting the distressed, and bringing sinners to repentance: he had also encouraged many persons to suffer martyrdom. It was a settled maxim with him, that it is more glorious for a Christian to suffer poverty than to possess riches; the great advantage of which consists in employing them on the poor, those especially who were persecuted for the faith. He had likewise the gift of miracles; for, according to his acts, he, by his prayers and the laying on of his hands, healed such as were afflicted with incurable diseases. A life of softness and ease he condemned as unworthy a Christian, saying, that "it enervates a soldier of Christ, and that a Christian addicted to pleasure can never be a martyr," as every disciple of Christ is bound to be in the disposition of his heart. So persuasive were his exhortations to piety, that by them he converted drunkards to temperance, the most debauched persons to continence, and the covetous to the love of poverty. When the persecution of Dioclesian was raised against the church, Theodotus was not dismayed: because his whole life had been a preparation for martyrdom. The bloody edicts published at Nicomedia in 303, soon reached Galatia. Theotecnus, the most cruel governor of that province, promised the emperor to extirpate the Christian name out of his district. No sooner had the bare report of his being on the road to Ancyra reached that city, than the greater part of the faithful betook themselves to flight; incredible numbers of them taking shelter in deserts and mountainous places. The pagans in the mean while feasted and revelled in transports of public joy on this occasion. They broke into the houses of the Christians, and carried off whatever they pleased without opposition; for the least complaint would have been dangerous to him that made it. No Christian was seen in the streets, unless to suffer for his religion, or to renounce it: the most noted persons among them lay in prison, loaded with irons, their goods confiscated, their wives and daughters dragged about the streets by insolent ruffians, and their very babes forced to undergo the greatest hardships, on account of the religious principle of their parents, the only crime they alleged against them.

While this violent persecution raged at Ancyra, Theodotus assisted those who were imprisoned for the faith, and buried the bodies of the martyrs, though the performance of that last duty was forbid under pain of death. The governor had ordered all the provisions that were sold publicly to be offered to the idols before they were exposed to sale, that the Christians might be reduced to starve, or give a sanction to that abominable consecration, and even be obliged to unite the service of Jesus Christ with that of the devils on the very altar. But Theodotus had laid in a large stock of corn and wine which he sold to the Christians at prime cost, and thus the altars were furnished with pure oblations, and the faithful supplied with food, without defiling their consciences, or giving the least umbrage to the pagans. His profession privileged this way of proceeding; and thus, while he seemed only employed in keeping an inn, his house was at once the place of divine worship, an hospital for the sick and strangers, and the only refuge of the Christians in that town. While he thus studied the security of others, he freely exposed his own life on all occasions where the glory of God was concerned. A friend of his, named Victor, was taken up at that time, and accused by the priests of Diana of having said Apollo had debauched that goddess, his own sister; and that it was a shame for the Greeks to honour him as a god, who was guilty of a crime that shocks the lewdest of men. The judge offered him his life, if he would comply with the edict of the emperors; and he was made to believe his obedience would be rewarded with great preferment at court; but if he remained obstinate, he was to expect a slow and painful death; his body should be thrown to the dogs, his estate confiscated, and his family quite destroyed. Theodotus, full of apprehension for his friend, thus powerfully attacked, hastened to the prison where he was confined, encouraged him to bear up against all the menaces, and despise the promises, that were employed to deprive him of the eternal reward due to his perseverance. Victor received fresh courage from his discourse, and, as long as he remembered the instructions of our saint, was an over-match for all the cruelty of his executioners. He had almost finished his course, when he desired some time to consider of the proposals that had been offered him; upon which, he was carried back to prison, where he died of his wounds, without making any further declaration, which has left his end doubtful in the church, and deprived him of the honour due to martyrs.

There is a town at some miles distance from Ancyra, called Malus, where Theodotus, by a particular disposition of providence, arrived, just as the persecutors were throwing into the river Halys the remains of the martyr Valens, who after long and cruel torments had been burnt alive. These relicks Theodotus found means to secure, and was carrying off, when, at some little distance from Malus, he was met by some Christians, who had been taken up by their own relations for beating down an altar of Diana, and had lately recovered their liberty by his means; Theodotus having, besides great trouble and expence in the affair, exposed his very life in their deliverance. They were all overjoyed to see him, and joined in thanks to him, as the common friend and benefactor of persons in distress : and he no less rejoicing at the sight of those glorious confessors, desired they would allow him to give them some refreshment before they went any farther. They sat down about a quarter of a mile from the town, and sent thither to invite the priest of the place to dine with them, and say the usual prayers before meat, (a) and those for travellers before they pursued their journey. The messengers met the priest, as he was coming out of the church after sext, or the prayer of the sixth hour, (b) who pressed Theodotus to come to his house to dine with him : but our saint desired to be excused, being in haste to return to Ancyra for the assistance of the suffering Christians in that city. After dining together on the spot, Theodotus told the priest, he thought that place very proper for the lodging of relicks. " Yes," said Fronto, for that was the priest's name, " but we must have them, before we can think of building a place for their reception." Theodotus told him, God would take care of that ; desired he would only see an edifice raised as soon as possible ; and assured him the relicks should not be wanting. When he had given him this assurance, he took his ring from his finger, left it with the priest as an earnest of his promise, and returned to Ancyra, where he found the persecution had made as much havock as an earthquake could have done.

Among those that suffered in that city were seven Virgins, grown old in virtue. The governor, finding them invincible in the profession of the Christian faith, delivered them into the hands of some young libertines to be insulted and abused in contempt of their religion, and to the prejudice of their chastity, which had always been their brightest ornament. They had no arms but prayers and tears, which they offered to Jesus Christ, the author and guardian of their virtue : and protested against the violence offered them. One of the young debauchees, more impudent than the rest, laid hold of Thecusa, the oldest of that holy company, and dragged her aside. Thecusa cast herself at his feet, bathed in tears, and thus expostulated with him : “ My son, what designs can you have on such as us, quite worn out, as you see, with fasting, sickness, torments, and old age ?” She was upwards of seventy, and her companions not much younger. “ It is preposterous, said she, to entertain a passion for such carcases as ours, shortly to be cast forth to be devoured by beasts and birds of prey ; for the governor refuses us burial.” Then rending her veil, she shewed him her grey hairs, saying : “ Pay some regard to these, who perhaps have a mother of the same age. For her sake, leave us to our tears, 'tis all we desire ; and do not despair of a reward from Christ on account of your forbearance.” The young men were all so affected with this speech, that they desisted, and joined their tears with those of the holy virgins, and withdrew. Theotecnus, perceiving his design defeated, attacked their constancy another way. He proposed their engaging in the service of Diana and Minerva, and officiating as priestesses to those pretended deities. The heathens of Ancyra had an annual custom of washing the images of those goddesses in a neighbouring pond : and the day for performing that ceremony happening at that time, the governor obliged them to attend the solemnity. As the idols were each to be carried thither in a pompous manner, and in a separate chariot, the governor gave orders for the seven virgins to be placed in derision in other open chariots, in a standing posture, naked, and to be carried with the idols to the pond for the same purpose. They accordingly led up the procession, then came the idols, followed by a great crowd of people, and Theotecnus himself in the rear, attended by his guards.

(a) Nec enim cibum sumere consueverat sanctus, nisi benedicente presbytero. Act. p. 341.

(b) That is, noon or twelve o'clock : the Terce of the ancients, or the third hour corresponding to our nine in the morning ; and their None or ninth hour to our three in the afternoon, or thereabouts.

Theodotus was all this while under great concern for the seven virgins, begged the Almighty to carry them victoriously through the severe trials to which they were exposed; and waited the event in a house near the church of the patriarchs, in company with some other devout persons. They had been prostrate on the ground, and fixed in prayer from break of day till noon, when news was brought that Thecusa and her six companions had been all thrown into the pond aforesaid, and there drowned. Theodotus, overjoyed at this account, raised himself on his knees, shed a flood of tears, lifted up his hands to heaven, and, with a loud voice returned thanks for the success of his prayers. He then enquired into the particulars of their sufferings and behaviour, and was told by one who had been in the crowd, and had seen all things that passed, how that the virgins had slighted all the governor's fair speeches and promises, had severely rebuked the priestesses of the heathen deities that presented them the crowns and white garments, which were the badges of their priestly office, and rejected their offer with horror and indignation. Whereupon the governor ordered them to be thrown into the deepest part of the pond, with large stones hung about their necks; which was accordingly executed. Theodotus, upon hearing this, consulted with the master of the house and one Polychronius, how they should get the bodies of the seven martyrs out of the water; and in the evening they were informed, that the task was rendered more difficult by the guards the governor had posted near the pond. This news gave Theodotus a most sensible affliction. He left his company, and went to the church of the patriarchs; but found the pagans had deprived him of the comfort he expected there, by walling up the door. However, he prostrated himself without the church, near the shell where the altar stood, and continued there some time in prayer. From thence he made his way to another church, where finding the same bar to his entrance, he again threw himself on the ground near the building, and poured out his soul in fervent prayer. But hearing a great noise behind him, imagining he was pursued, he went back to the house where he had left his friends, and lay there that night. Thecusa appeared to him in his dream, reproached him with taking his ease, while she and the companions of her sufferings were neglected; conjured him by all the pains she had taken for his education, and the affection he once bore her, to rescue their bodies from the fishes; assured him he should be called to a like trial within two days, and then bid him arise, and go directly to the pond, but to beware of a traitor.

Upon this he arose, and related his vision to his companions, and, as soon as it was day, sent two persons to take a view of the guard, which they hoped would be drawn off on account of its being the festival of Diana; but they were mistaken. To engage the blessing of God more effectually on their undertaking, they fasted till night, and then set out. It was very dark, and neither moon nor stars appeared, which enhanced the horror of the place, it being where malefactors were executed. It was strewed with heads and scattered remains of burnt bodies. This shocking scene would probably have made them give over the attempt for that time, had not they been encouraged by a voice which called our saint by his name, and bid him go on boldly. Upon this invitation they made the sign of the cross on their foreheads, (c) and immediately saw before them a light in the form of a cross to the eastward. They fell on their knees, adored God with their faces turned toward that glorious phenomenon, after which they went on; but it was so dark that they could not see one another; at the same time a heavy rain fell, which made it so dirty, that they could scarce keep themselves upon their legs. In this difficulty they had recourse to prayer, and immediately a body of fire appeared, and moved before them: and two men clothed in shining garments appearing to them, were heard to say: "Theodotus, take courage, God has written thy name among the martyrs : he has sent us to receive thee ; we are they whom they call the Fathers : thou wilt find near the pond Sosander in arms ; and the guards are in a terrible consternation at the sight of him : but thou shouldst not have brought a traitor with thee ;" this last clause none of the company understood. The storm still continuing, the thunder, wind and rain, made the centinels very uneasy in their post ; but the apparition of a man completely armed darting fire round him, was too terrible to allow them to keep their ground. They accordingly betook themselves to the neighbouring cottages. The way being thus cleared for our martyr and his companions, following their guide, or luminous body before-mentioned, they came to the side of the pond ; and the wind raged so violently, that, as it drove the water to the sides of the pond, it discovered the bottom where the bodies of the virgins lay. Whereupon Theodotus and his companions drew out the bodies, laid them upon horses, and carried them to the church of the patriarchs, near which they interred them. The names of these seven martyrs were Thecusa, Alexandria, Claudia, Euphrasia, Matrona, Julitta and Phaina.

(c). Per terræ facti crucis signum suæ quisque impressit fronti. Act. P. 344.

The news of this removal of the saints bodies was spread all over the town the next day ; every Christian that appeared was put to torture about it. Theodotus, understanding that several had been taken up, was for surrendering himself, and owning the fact : but the Christians would not let him follow his inclinations. Polychronius, who had assisted our saint in carrying off the bodies of the seven virgins, the better to be informed of what passed in the city, disguised himself in a peasant's dress, and went to the market-place. But he was discovered by some, who knew him to be related to Thecusa, carried before the governor, examined, and being beaten by his order, and threatened with death, he was weak and base enough to say that Theodotus had taken away the bodies, and discovered the place where he had concealed them. Upon which, orders were given for these valuable relicks to be taken up and burnt: and thus it appeared who was the traitor, against whom they had been cautioned. Theodotus, being informed of this, took his last farewell of the brethren; begged their prayers, and prepared himself for the combat. They continued a long time in prayer, beseeching God to put an end to the persecution, and grant peace to the church. They then embraced him; who making the sign of the cross over his body, (d) went boldly to the place of trial. Meeting two of his old acquaintance and fellow-citizens on the way, they endeavoured to persuade him to provide for his own security, before it was too late; and told him the priestesses of Diana and Minerva were that moment with the governor, accusing him of discouraging the worship of the gods, and that Polychronius too was there, ready to prove what he had alleged about his carrying off the bodies of the seven martyrs.

Theodotus assured them they could not give him a more substantial proof of their regard for him, than by going to the magistrates, and telling them the man, against whom those articles were alleged, was at the door, and desired admittance. Being come to the end of his journey, he with a smiling countenance surveyed the fire, wheels, racks, and other instruments of torture which they had got ready upon this occasion. The governor told him it was still in his power to avoid the torments prepared for the disobedient; offered him his friendship, assured him of the good will of the emperor, and promised to make him a priest of Apollo, and governor of the town, upon condition he would endeavour to recover his neighbours and friends from their delusion, and teach them to forget Jesus Christ. Theodotus, in his reply, on one hand insisted on the enormous crimes the heathen gods stood charged with even by their own poets and historians; and, on the other, extolled the greatness and the miracles of Jesus Christ. A discourse like this could not but incense the idolaters. The priestesses were so transported with rage, that they rent their clothes, disheveled their hair, and tore their crowns, which were the marks of their sacrilegious dignity; and the populace were very clamorous in demanding justice on this enemy of their gods. The governor ordered him to be stretched on the rack, and every one seemed desirous of having a share in vindicating the honour of the offended deities. Several executioners were successively employed in tearing his body with iron-hooks: then vinegar was poured upon his wounds, and his flesh burnt with torches. When the martyr smelt the burning of his flesh, he turned his head aside a little; which the governer mistaking for a sign of his fainting under the torments, put him in mind that his present sufferings were all owing to his disrespect for the emperor, and contempt of the gods. The martyr told him he was mistaken in imagining he was in a yielding disposition, because he turned his head aside; on the contrary, he could not help thinking that his officers did their duty carelessly, and therefore intreated him to see that his orders were better obeyed. He then bid him invent new tortures, which should all contribute to shew what courage Jesus Christ inspires into such as suffer for him; and let him know in plain terms, that while he was thus united to, and supported by his Saviour, he was an overmatch for all the power of men. The governor, surprised and enraged at this freedom, commanded him to be struck on the jaws with a stone, in order to beat out his teeth. But Theodotus told him nothing of that nature could interrupt his conversation with his God, who would hear the language of his heart and sufferings, if he should be deprived of the use of speech. The executioners were now quite tired out with labour, while the martyr seemed to feel nothing: upon which he was ordered back to prison, and reserved for farther punishment. As he went along, he took care to draw the eyes of the crowd on his mangled body, which he offered to their consideration as a glorious proof of the power of Jesus Christ, and the strength he gives to his servants, of what condition soever; and pointing at his wounds: "It is but reasonable," said he, "that we should offer to Him such sacrifices, who was pleased to set us the example, and submit to be sacrificed for us." At the end of five days, the governor ordered Theodotus to be brought before him, and finding his courage not the least abated, directed the executioners to stretch him a second time upon the rack, and open all his wounds. He then caused him to be taken off and laid upon the ground, strewed with red hot tiles, which put him to inexpressible torment. But finding him not to be overcome, though put upon the rack the third time, and tortured as before, he condemned him to lose his head: with strict orders that his body should be burnt to prevent its being buried by the Christians. The holy martyr being come to the place of execution, returned thanks to Jesus Christ for his grace and support under the torments he had undergone, and for having made choice of him for a citizen of the heavenly Jerusalem: he also begged of him to put an end to the persecution, and grant peace to his afflicted church. Then turning to the Christians who attended him, bid them not weep, but rather thank God for having enabled him to finish his course, and overcome the enemy; and assured them that he would employ his charity in praying for them with confidence in heaven (e). After this short speech he cheerfully received the fatal stroke. The corpse was then laid upon a large funeral pile, but before they could set fire to it, they beheld it surrounded with such an extraordinary light that none durst approach near enough to kindle it. This being reported to the governor, he ordered the body to be watched by a guard he dispatched thither for that purpose.

(a) Totumque corpus suum signo crucis maniens, in stadium processit, animo imperterrito. p. 345.

Fronto, the priest of Malus, came to Ancyra that day with the view of carrying back the relicks Theodotus had promised him, and had brought with him the ring he had left in his hands as a pledge. He had with him an ass laden with wine of his own vineyard, which he cultivated himself: this was probably designed as a present to Theodotus. He reached the town in the evening; his ass, tired with the journey, lay down near the pile, and did not seem disposed to go any farther. The soldiers invited him to pass the night with them, where they assured him he might be better accommodated than at an inn; they having made themselves the day before a hut of reeds and willow branches, near which they had kindled a fire and dressed their supper, just as the priest arrived, whom they invited to partake with them. Fronto accepted of their invitation, and in return gave them a taste of his wine, which they found excellent, and of which they drank pretty freely. They then began to talk of what they had suffered on occasion of the dead bodies of seven women being carried away by one made of brass, as they said, whose body was now in their custody. Fronto desired they would explain themselves, and let him into the story of the dead bodies and the brazen man. One of them undertook to give the particulars of the seven martyrs, the rescue of their bodies, the seeming insensibility of Theodotus, while under the sharpest torments, which was the reason of their calling him a man of brass; and the punishment they had reason to expect, if they lost his body. Hereupon Fronto gave God thanks, and invoked his assistance on the present occasion. After supper, perceiving the guards in a dead sleep, he took the venerable relicks of the martyr, put his ring upon his finger, and laid the body on the ass, which, being let loose, went directly home, where a church has been since built in honour of the martyr: and thus the saint's promise of furnishing the priest with relicks was made good.

(e) Deinceps enim in cælis cum fiducia Deum pro vobis deprecabor. p. 349.

This account was drawn up by Nilus, who had lived with the martyr, had been his fellow-prisoner, and was an eye-witness of what he relates.

ON THE SAME DAY.

St VENANTIUS, M. He made a glorious confession of his faith, and, after suffering many torments, was beheaded in the persecution of Decius in 250, at Camerino, a city near the Marquisate of Ancona, in Italy; of which place he was a native. His body is kept with singular veneration in that city. Pope Clement X. who had been bishop of Camerino, had a particular devotion to this martyr, who suffered very young. See the Bollandists.

St POTAMON, M. He was bishop of Heraclea in Egypt. St Athanasius says he was doubly a martyr, under the heathens and under the Arians. When Maximinus Daia, or Daza, persecuted the Christians in 310, he gloriously confessed the faith, for which one of his eyes was bored out, and probably the sinews of one ham were cut, as in St Paphnutius and others. The marks of his sufferings rendered him conspicuous in the council of Nice in 325, in which he exerted his zeal against the Arians. He accompanied and defended St Athanasius in the council of Tyre in 335, as was related in the life of that saint on the second of May. When the tyrant Gregory had usurped the patriarchal chair of St Athanasius, he with Philagrius, prefect of Egypt, an apostate to Arianism under Constantius, travelled over all Egypt, tormenting and banishing the catholics; and St Potamon, for his distinguished zeal, was by their order beaten on his back with clubs, so long as to be left for dead. However, by the help of medicines, he came to himself, but died shortly after, a martyr for the divinity of the Son of God, in 341, as St Athanasius relates. See St Athanasius ep. ad Solit. & Apolog. Rufin. l. 2. c. 4. St Epiph. hæc. 68.

M A Y XIX.

ST PETER CELESTINE, POPE, C.

From his two most authentic lives in Papebroke, T. 4. Maij. p. 419. also Bzovius and other continuators of Baronius. See likewise his life written by James cardinal of St George, about the year 1295. in Muratori's Scriptor. Ital. T. 3. p. 513.

A. D. 1296.

HUMILITY raised this saint above the world, and preserved his soul free from its poison, both amidst its flatteries and under its frowns. He was born in Apulia about the year 1221. His parents were very virtuous, and charitable to the poor to the uttermost of their abilities. After his father's death, his mother, though she had eleven other sons, seeing his extraordinary inclination to piety, provided him with a literary education. His progress gave his friends great expectations: but he always considered that he had only one affair in this world, and that an affair of infinite importance, the salvation of his soul; that no security can be too great where an eternity is at stake: moreover, that the way to life is strait, the account which we are to give of all our actions and thoughts, most rigorous, the judge infinitely just, and the issue either sovereign happiness or sovereign misery. He therefore made the means, by which he might best secure to himself that bliss for which alone he was created, his constant study. An eremitical state is only the vocation of souls, which are already perfect in the exercises of penance and contemplation. Peter had made the practice of both familiar to him from his tender years: and by a long noviceship was qualified for such a state, to which he found himself strongly inclined. Therefore at twenty years of age he left the schools, and retired to a solitary mountain, where he made himself a little cell under ground, but so small that he could scarce stand or lie down in it. Here he lived three years in great austerities; during which he was often assailed by violent temptations; but these he overcame by the help of such practices and austerities as the grace of God suggested to him. Notwithstanding the care he took to sequester himself from the world, he was discovered, and some time after compelled to enter into holy orders. He was ordained priest at Rome; but in 1246, returned into Abruzzo, and lived five years in a cave on mount Morroni near Sulmona. He received great favours from heaven, the usual recompence of contemplative souls who have crucified their affections to this world: but then they are purchased through severe interior trials; and with such Peter was frequently visited. He was also molested with nocturnal illusions during his sleep, by which he was almost driven to despair, insomuch that he durst not say mass, and once determined to abandon his solitude: but was encouraged by the advice of a religious man, his confessor, who assured him that it was no more than a stratagem of the enemy, by which he could not be hurt, if he despised it. For farther satisfaction, he determined to go to Rome to consult the pope on that subject, and received great comfort by a vision he was favoured with on the road; a certain holy abbot lately deceased appearing to him, who gave him the small counsel, and ordered him to return to his cell and offer every day the holy sacrifice, which he accordingly did. The wood on his mountain being cut down in 1251, he with two companions removed to mount Magella. There with the boughs of trees and thorns these three servants of God made themselves a little inclosure and cells, in which they enjoyed more solid pleasure than the great ones of the world can find in their stately palaces and gardens. The devil sometimes endeavoured to disturb them; but they triumphed over his assaults. Many others were desirous to put themselves under his direction: but the saint alleged his incapacity to direct others. However his humility was at length overcome, and he admitted those who seemed the most fervent.

Peter spent always the greatest part of the night in prayer and tears; which he did not interrupt, whilst he was employed in the day in corporal labour or in copying books. His body he always treated as a most dangerous domestic enemy. He never eat flesh; he fasted every day except Sunday. He kept four lents in the year: during three of which, and on all Fridays, he took nothing but bread and water, unless it were a few cabbage leaves in lieu of bread. The bread which he used was so hard, that it could only be chopped in pieces. His austerities were excessive, till he was admonished in a vision not to destroy that body which his duty to God required him to support. If the holy Ghost sometimes conducted the saints by extraordinary paths, we must learn from their fervour the condemnation of our sloth, who dare undertake nothing for the sake of virtue, and who shrink often under indispensable duties. St Peter wore a shirt of horse-hair full of knots, and a chain of iron about his waist. He lay on the ground, or on a board, with a stone or log of wood for a pillow. It was his chiefest care always to nourish his soul with heavenly contemplation and prayer: yet he did not refuse to others the comfort of his spiritual succours. He gave advice, except on Wednesdays and Fridays, and during his lents, which he passed in inviolable silence. Finding his solitude too much disturbed, he went with some of his disciples to a cavern which was almost inaccessible, on the top of mount Magella. This did but increase the ardour of others to pursue him. Wherefore he returned to mount Morrioni, where many lived in scattered cells under his direction, till he assembled them in a monastery; and in 1274 obtained of pope Gregory X. the approbation of his religious Order, under the rule of St Bennet, which he restored to its primitive severity. The saint lived to see thirty-six monasteries, and 600 monks and nuns: and this institute has been since propagated over all Europe, but is at present much mitigated.

Upon the death of Nicholas IV. the see of Rome continued vacant two years and three months, when the cardinals assembled at Perugia unanimously chose our saint for his successor, out of pure regard to his eminent sanctity. This election, on account of its disinterestedness, met with a general applause, and the saint seemed the only person afflicted on the occasion. He was indeed alarmed beyond measure at the news; and finding all the reasons he could allege for his declining the charge ineffectual, betook himself to flight in company with Robert, one of his monks, but was intercepted. He would gladly have engaged Robert still to attend him, but the good monk excused himself, by an answer worthy of a disciple of the saint: "Compel me not," says he, "to throw myself upon your thorns. I am the companion of your flight, not of your exaltation." Peter thereupon dropt his request, and sighing before God, returned to Morrioni, where the kings of Hungary and Naples, besides many cardinals and princes, waited for him. Thence he proceeded to the neighbouring cathedral of Aquila, to be ordained bishop of Rome, being accompanied by the two kings, and an incredible number of princes and others: yet could not be prevailed upon to travel any other way than riding on an ass: he even thought it a great deal that he did not go on foot, as he desired to do. He was consecrated and crowned at Aquila on the 29th of August, taking the name of Celestine V. from an allusion to the Latin name of heaven, where he always dwelt in his heart: his monks have been distinguished by the name of Celestines ever since. Charles, king of Naples, persuaded him to go with him to his capital, to regulate certain ecclesiastical affairs of that kingdom, and to fill the vacant benefices. The new pope disgusted many of the cardinals by employing strangers in the conducting matters, the care of which had been usually entrusted to them. He was sometimes led by others into mistakes, which gave occasion to complaints, and increased his own scruples for having taken upon him so great a charge, to which he found himself unequal; especially on account of his want of experience in the world, and his not having studied the canon-law. He continued his former austerities, and built himself a cell of boards in the midst of his palace, where he lived in solitude amidst the crowds which surrounded him, humble on the pinnacle of honour, and poor in the midst of riches. He shut himself up to spend the Advent in retirement that he might prepare himself for Christmas, having committed the care of the church to three cardinals. This again was an occasion of fresh scruples, when he reflected that a pastor is bound himself to a personal attendance on the duties of his charge. These fears of conscience, the weight of his dignity, which he felt every day more and more insupportable, and the desire of enjoying himself in solitude, moved him at length to deliberate whether he might not resign his dignity. He consulted cardinal Benedict Cajetan, a person the best skilled in the canon law, and others, who agreed in their advice, that it was in the power of a pope to abdicate. When this became public, many vigorously opposed the motion: but no solicitations or motives could make the holy man alter his resolution. Wherefore some days after, he held at Naples a consistory of the cardinals, at which the king of Naples, and many others, were present: before them he read the solemn act of his abdication, then laid aside his pontifical robes and ornaments, put on his religious habit, came down from his throne, and cast himself at the feet of the assembly, begging pardon for his faults, and exhorting the cardinals to repair them in the best manner they were able, by choosing a worthy successor to St Peter. Thus having sat in the chair four months, he abdicated the supreme dignity in the church, on the 13th of December 1294, with greater joy than the most ambitious man could mount the throne of the richest empire in the world. This the cheerfulness of his countenance evidenced, no less than his words. Cardinal Benenict Cajetan, the ablest civilian and canonist of his age, was chosen in his place, and crowned at Rome on the 16th of January following.

Men, as it usually happens on such occasions, were divided in their sentiments with regard to this extraordinary action, of which we see a specimen, in the writings of those great men who in that age began to restore at Florence the true taste of polite literature. Dante, who has stained his reputation with many blots in his moral and civil conduct, and his works with many falsities and unjust prepossessions, ascribes this cession of Celestine to pusillanimity. But this base censure is justly chastised by his countryman Petrarch, who passed his unjust and glorious banishment at Vaucluse, near Avignon, respected by the whole world, till he was courted by his fellow-citizens to honour his native country again with his presence, though he preferred to it a retirement at Padua. (a) This great man, speaking of the abdication of the holy pope, says: "This action I call a sublime and heavenly fortitude, which he only possesses, who knows the emptiness of all worldly dignities. The contempt of honours arises from an heroic courage, not from a want of that virtue; as the desire of them shews that a soul raiseth not herself above herself."

St. Celestine immediately stole away privately to his monastery of the Holy Ghost at Morrone. But several, who were offended at some acts of justice and necessary severity in the new pope, raised various reports as if he had by ambition and fraud supplanted Celestine: others advanced that a pope could not resign his dignity. Boniface, moreover, was alarmed at the multitudes which resorted to Morrone to see Celestine, on account of the great reputation of his sanctity; and fearing he might be made a handle of by designing men, the consequence whereof might be some disturbance in the church, he intreated the king of Naples to send him to Rome. The saint, seeing that he could not be permitted to return to his cell, betook himself to flight, and put to sea, with a view to cross the Adriatic gulph; but was driven back by contrary winds into the harbour of Vieste, where he was secured by the governor, pursuant to an order of the king of Naples, and conducted to pope Boniface at Anagni. Boniface kept him some time in his own palace, often discoursing with him, that he might discover if he had ever consented to those that called his abdication null and invalid. The saint's unfeigned simplicity bearing evidence to the contrary, many advised the pope to set him at liberty, and send him to his monastery. But Boniface, alleging the danger of tumults and of a schism, confined him in the citadel of Fumone, nine miles from Anagni, under a guard of soldiers. The authors of the life of the saint say, that he there suffered many insults and hardships, which yet never drew from his mouth the least word of complaint. On the contrary, he sent word to Boniface, by two cardinals who came to see him, that he was content with his condition, and desired no other. He used to say, with wonderful tranquillity: "I desired nothing in the world but a cell; and a cell they have given me." He sang the divine praises, almost without interruption, with two of his monks who were assigned him for his companions. On Whitsunday, in 1296, after he had heard mass with extraordinary fervour, he told his guards that he should die before the end of the week. He immediately sickened of a fever, and received extreme-unction. Even in that dying condition, he would never suffer a little straw to be strewed on the hard boards upon which he always lay, and prayed without interruption. On Saturday the 19th of May, finishing the last psalm of lauds at those words: Let every spirit praise the Lord, he calmly closed his eyes to this world, and his soul passed to the company of the angels, he being seventy-five years old. During his ten months imprisonment he never abated any thing of his ordinary austerities. Pope Boniface, with all the cardinals, performed his funeral obsequies at St Peter's. His body was sumptuously buried at Ferentino; but was afterwards translated to Aquila, and is kept in the church of the Celestines near that city. Many miracles are authentically recorded of him, and he was canonized by Clement V. in 1313. Boniface fell into great calamities.

(a) Dante died in 1321 at Ravenna, whither he was exiled upon account of his factious and turbulent spirit. In his poetry there are many beauties, but his indecencies shock us. Petrarch was also exiled, but unjustly, and died at Arcqua in 1374. His works in prose and verse render his name immortal. See on Dante and Petrarch, Specimen Historiæ litterariæ Florentinæ a Jannotio Manetto. Florentiæ, 1747. in 8vo. a work composed in the fifteenth age.

Philip the Fair, king of France, who was his declared enemy, sent a body of troops, under the command of William Nogaret, to support the conspiracy of Stephen and Chiara Colonna against him, by whom he was made prisoner at Anagni. After much ill treatment he was rescued out of their hands by the Ursini from Rome; but died soon after of grief in 1303.

A spirit of retirement, or a love of holy solitude and its exercises, and an habitual interior recollection, are essential to piety and a true Christian life. Some, by a particular call of God, dedicate themselves to his service in a state of perfect solitude: In which the first motive may be self defence or preservation. In the world snares are laid every where for us, and its lusts often endeavour to court and betray us, and the torrent of its example, or the violence of its persecutions, to drive and force us into death. Whoever therefore prudently fears that he is not a match for so potent an enemy, may, nay sometimes ought, to retire from the world. This is not to decline the service of God or man, but sin and danger; it is not to prefer ease and security before industry and labour, but before a rash presumption and a fatal overthrow. But entire solitude is a safer state only to those who are animated with such a love and esteem for all its exercises, as give an assurance of their constant fervour in them; also who seriously cultivate interior solitude of mind, and will never suffer it to gad abroad after the objects of worldly affairs, vanities or pleasures: lastly, whose souls are free from envy, emulation, ambition, desire of esteem, and all other busy and turbulent passions, which cannot fail by desires and hankerings to discompose the mind, and muddy the pure stream, and adulterate the relish of a retired life. The soul must be reduced to its native purity and simplicity, before it will be able to taste the blessings of true liberty, of regular devotion and elevated meditation.

Secondly, An indication that God designs certain persons for retirement, is the discovery of talents fitted for this state, rather than for any public station. For here are active and contemplative gifts. Those who are destined by heaven to a retired life, in it become most eminently serviceable to the world, by proving excellent examples of innocence, and the perfect spirit of every Christian virtue, and by their prayers, and continual pure homages of praise and thanksgivings to God, from which others may reap far more valuable benefits than from the labours of the learned, or the bountiful alms of the rich. Thus the world never loses a member, but enjoys its service in its proper place, and the most effectual manner, says an ingenious Protestant writer; who adds, that such a one retires not from the world to avoid its service, but its fooleries.

3dly, The same author observes, that the main end of retirement ought always to be to dedicate ourselves entirely to God, by the exercises of compunction and holy contemplation. This may be easily demonstrated both from reason and religion, and from the examples of so many illustrious saints. Retirement is recommended by particular motives to persons who, after going through the station of a public life, are at liberty to embrace it in order to fit themselves for eternity.

ON THE SAME DAY.

St PUDENTIANA, V. She was sister of St Praxedes, and daughter of Pudens, a Roman senator, who was converted to the faith by the apostles SS. Peter and Paul. Her festival is mentioned in the sacramentary of St Gregory. Her church in Rome is esteemed the most ancient that is known in the world. It was in the first ages called the church of the Pastor, and is said to have been the palace of Pudens, in which St Peter lodged and celebrated the divine mysteries. See the Bollandists, and Tillem. T. 2.

St DUNSTAN, archbishop of Canterbury, C. He was a native of the town of Glastenbury, of noble birth, and received his education under certain Irish monks, who were excellent masters of the sciences, and at that time resided at Glastenbury, which the wars had left in a most ruinous condition. Dunstan outstripped his companions in every branch of literature which he thought worth his attention, and through the recommendation of Athelmus, archbishop of Canterbury, his uncle, with whom he had lived some time, was called to the court of the great king Athelstan, a lover of virtue and learned men. He enjoyed the favour of that prince, above all the rest who had the honour to approach his person, till envy made him feel the usual instability of the fortune of courtiers. Dunstan had in his youth received the clerical tonsure and the lesser orders, and from his cradle been fervent in practising every means of virtue, especially of modesty, purity and humility. After he left the court he took the monastic habit, being advised thereto by Elphegus the Bald, bishop of Winchester, also his uncle, who not long after ordained him priest. When he was well grounded in the knowledge and practice of the duties of his profession, the bishop, on giving him proper instructions for his conduct, sent him to Glastenbury with the view of serving that church. Here he built for himself a small cell, 5 feet long, and $2\frac{1}{2}$ broad with an oratory, adjoining to the wall of the great church which was dedicated under the invocation of the mother of God. In this hermitage he spent his time in prayer and fasting. He had also his hours for manual labour, which is a part of penance, and necessary to shun idleness. His labour consisted in making crosses, vials, censers and sacred vestments: he likewise painted, and copied good books. King Athelstan dying after a glorious reign of sixteen years, the throne was filled by his brother Edmund, who succeeded to the crown in 900. His palace of Chedder was but nine miles from Glastenbury, to which church he often resorted with singular devotion, and having been long acquainted with the sanctity of St Dunstan, he installed him the nineteenth abbot of that house from St Brithwald, who was the first Englishman who had governed it, 270 years before.

(a) King Edmund had reigned only six years and a

(a) The West-Saxon kings exceedingly enriched the abbey of Glastenbury, as may be seen by their charters extant in John of Glastenbury, &c. But it had been famous in the times of the Britons, and its church was the oldest in Britain, founded by those who first planted the faith of Christ in this island; which happened about the end of the reign of Tiberius, says Gildas, though few at first embraced it, as he half when he was treacherously murdered, and buried at Glastenbury. His sons Edwi and Edgar being too young to govern, his brother Edred was called to the

he adds. Metaphrastes quotes a passage from Eusebius, importing that St Peter preached in Britain. Fortunatus, Sophronius, &c. affirm the same of St Paul. It is at least certain from Tertullian, Origen, Eusebius, Theodoret, &c. that the light of the gospel had diffused its rays into Britain soon after the dispersion of the apostles. William of Malmesbury, l. de Antiquitatibus Glastoniæ, published by the learned Thomas Gale, relates, from very ancient records, that the old church of Glastenbury was built by those who had sown the first seeds of faith in Britain. This island amidst marshes was first called Avallona, or isle of apples, from the British word Aval, apples, because it abounded with apple-trees, which were very scarce in those parts. When twelve brothers came from North-Britain to seek settlements in that country, the youngest, named Glasteing, settled in this island, which from him took the name of Glastenbury. William of Malmesbury, l. de Antiq. Glaston. says, that St Patrick, in 453, finding in this island twelve anchorets, gathered them together in a monastery which he built near the old church, and was himself the first abbot. Some think this St Patrick the same who was the apostle of Ireland: but all the Glastenbury writers agree, that this St Patrick died and lay buried at Glastenbury. Most of the British saints of note, who lived before the coming of the Saxons, are said to have been buried here, or at least to have for some time retired to this place of devotion. In Powel's history of Wales, p. 13. 14. it is related that Cadwallader, the last king of the Britons, fled from the swords of the Saxons into Wales, and soon after went to Rome never to return. Alan, his cousin, a British king, reigned in Armorica, where a great number of Britons who followed Maximus, by his grant, had settled themselves with their leader named Conan, lord of Meriadoc. This prince, hearing of the retreat of Cadwallader, sailed to Wales, and having raised an army, sent his son Ivor at the head of it against the West-Saxons, whom he defeated. The conquest of Cornwall, Devon and Somersetshire, was the fruit of his victory, and by a treaty and intermarriage he obtained quiet possession of the same, and was first king of that British state. The historian tells us that Ivor founded the monastery of Glastenbury, called by the Britons Inys-Avalon; for though he found there a church which was as ancient as Christianity in Britain, he first converted it into an abbey about the year 700. If monks had been placed there before, the wars had probably dispersed them, or much reduced their number. The annals of the abbey of Morgan, in Glamorganshire, published by Gale, relate that in 1191, in digging a grave for a monk, were found here the bones of king Arthur, of an enormous size, with this inscription: Here lies the illustrious king Arthur, buried in the isle Avallona: Those of his wife queen, Guenhavere, with the hair entire, lay above his coffin in the same grave. Powel places this discovery in 1179, and mentions that their bodies were laid in a hollow elder tree, buried 15 foot in the earth. Over the bones crown, who did nothing but by the advice of St Dunstan. He ended his pious life in 955, and was succeeded by his nephew Edwi a most debauched and profligate youth, who on the very day on which he was anointed king, left his nobles at the royal banquet to go to see his harlot and impious flatterers. St Dunstan followed him, and endeavoured by a severe check to put him in mind of the duty which he owed to God and men. In requital, the tyrant banished him, persecuted all the monks in his kingdom, and ruined all the abbeys which had escaped the devastation of the Danes, except Glastenbury and Abingdon.

St Dunstan spent one year in exile in Flanders, and according to Osbern, at St Peter's at Ghent, where his vestment is still shewn; but, according to John of Glastenbury, at St Amand's; the tradition and monuments of both places shew, that he divided the year betwixt them. He filled all Flanders with the odour of his sanctity, and the example of his virtues: but the Mercians and northern provinces shaking off the yoke of the tyrant Edwi, placed the crown on Edgar, who immediately recalled St Dunstan, made him his principal counsellor, and, in 957, preferred him to the bishopric of Worcester, to which he was consecrated by St Odo, archbishop of Canterbury. The see of London becoming vacant shortly after, he was compelled at bones was laid a stone with a cross of lead, and on the lower side the above-mentioned inscription. On the king's skull were the marks of ten wounds, one of them very large. The queen's hair seemed to the sight fair and yellow, but when touched crumbled presently to dust. This discovery is also related by John of Glastenbury, in his history of that abbey, published by Mr Hearne. This last author enumerates the principal relicks which were possessed by this abbey, as those of SS. Aidan, Ceolfrid, Boisil, Bede, Bennet Biscop, Oswald, &c. (brought thither from the north by king Edmund the elder in his victorious wars) also of St Valerius, B. M. St Anastasius, and SS. Abdon and Sennen, given by king Edgar: St David, &c. likewise a considerable portion of the true cross of Christ, given by king Alfred, who had received it from pope Martin. Some account of the rich treasury formerly belonging to this most venerable church, in which were innumerable monuments of the piety of all the most glorious among the West-Saxon kings, may be seen in the history of the said John, and in the Monasticons.

the same time also to govern that diocese, notwithstanding his opposition ; the public disorders requiring so strenuous a reformer of discipline and manners. King Edwi having reigned over all England one year, and over the southern part four years, ended a wicked life by an unhappy death in 959, when Edgar became sole monarch of the English nation, which he governed with the greatest courage, prudence and glory. In 961, St Dunstan was raised to the metropolitan see of Canterbury, though he used every device possible to decline that dignity. He was, moreover, appointed by the pope John XII. legate of the holy see. Being vested with this authority, he set himself about re-establishing every where ecclesiastical discipline, which had been much impaired by the confusion of the Danish invasions, and the tyranny of king Edwi ; in which he was powerfully protected by king Edgar, and assisted by his two disciples St Ethelwold bishop of Winchester, and St Oswald bishop of Worcester, and archbishop of York. These three prelates restored most of the great monasteries in England. To establish in them an uniform and perfect regular discipline, St Dunstan compiled The Concord of Rules, extant in Reyner and Spelman, in which he incorporates several old monastic customs with the rule of St Bennet. The reformation of the clergy was no less the object of his zeal. For their use he drew up excellent regulations which may be seen in Spelman (1) under this title : Canons published under king Edgar. Several among the secular clergy were, through the disorder of the times, fallen into so open a violation of the canons as to presume to marry. These St Dunstan expelled from the churches and monasteries, into which they had intruded themselves, and brought in monks in their place, who had been in possession of divers of them before the Danish devastations. At Winchester, when St Ethelwold had ejected the secular canons for incontinency, and placed monks in his cathedral, the former appealed from his proceedings. A synod therefore was held at Winchester in 968. In this venerable assembly was heard a voice as coming from a crucifix in the place, which said distinctly, "God forbid it should be so. You have judged well: to change your decree is not good." Upon which the synod confirmed what St Ethelwold had done, and king Edward the martyr made this decree a law of the state.

(1) Conc. Angl. T. 1. p. 447.

St Dunstan was no less vigorous in maintaining discipline among the laity, in which no motives of human respect were ever able to daunt him, or to damp his zeal. King Edgar had the misfortune to fall into a scandalous crime, by deflouring a virgin who had been educated in the monastery of Wilton, and who to elude his pursuits had put on a religious veil, but had not made any profession or vows. St Dunstan, being informed of this scandal, went in haste to the court, and like another Nathan reprov'd the king in a zealous, but respectful manner. The prince struck with remorse, begged with many tears that a suitable penance might be enjoined him, and became a faithful imitator of the perfect royal penitent David. The archbishop enjoined him a penance for seven years; during which term he was never to wear his crown, was ordered to fast twice a week, and to give large alms. Another part of his penance was, to found a nunnery, in which many holy virgins might consecrate themselves chaste spouses to Christ, in satisfaction for his crime in having violated a virgin. These conditions the king faithfully performed, and founded a rich monastery of nuns at Shaftsbury. The term of his penance being elapsed in 973, St Dunstan, in a public assembly of the lords and prelates, set the crown again upon his head. This great king ruled sixteen years, and dying in the 32d year of his age, left the kingdom to his eldest son Edward the martyr. The death of that pious young prince was a grievous affliction to St Dunstan, who, when he crown'd his younger brother in 979, foretold the weakness and the dreadful calamities of his reign. The Welch bishops had always been governed by the archbishop of St David's till about the year 983, when we find Gacon consecrated bishop of Landaff by St Dunstan: from which time the see of St David's lost its metropolitan jurisdiction.

St Dunstan frequently visited the churches over the whole kingdom, every where preaching and instructing the faithful with great zeal. Such was the dignity and the eloquence with which he delivered the word of God, that few were so hardened as to withstand the power of his exhortations. He employed his revenues in relieving the poor, he reconciled differences, refuted errors, and laboured incessantly in extirpating vices and abuses. But neither the care of his church, nor the attendance he was often obliged to give to the state, made him ever forget to find time for holy prayer and retirement: and, after the occupations of the day, he watched late at night in the private communications of his soul with God. Glastenbury was his dearest solitude, and thither he would often retire from the world, to devote himself entirely to heavenly contemplation. At Canterbury it was always his custom to visit in the night, even in the coldest weather, the church of St Austin, without the walls, and that of the Blessed Virgin adjoining to it. Finding himself taken ill in that city, he prepared himself for his last hour by redoubling his fervour in all his practices of penance and devotion. On the feast of the Ascension of our Lord, he preached thrice on that triumphant mystery, exhorting all to follow our Redeemer and Head in spirit and desire. Whilst he spoke, his countenance, like that of Moses coming down from the mount, seemed to shine and dart forth rays of light. In the close of his last discourse, he begged the prayers of his audience, and told his flock that God called him from them. At which words all that heard him were filled with inexpressible grief. In the afternoon he went again to the church, and appointed a place for his burial: then he took to his bed, and on the Saturday following, the nineteenth of May, having received the Viaticum, he calmly expired; closing his corporal eyes to the world, and at the same instant opening those of his soul to behold God with his angels in glory. His death happened the nineteenth of May, 988. the 64th of his age, and 27th of his archiepiscopal dignity. He was buried in his own cathedral, in the place he had appointed. John of Glastenbury relates, that his bones were translated to Glastenbury in 1012, two years after the martyrdom of St Elphege: but this at most could only be true of some portion thereof. For in 1508, archbishop Warham found his relicks remaining under his monument, which was then on the south side of the high altar. See his life in Mabillon, (Sæc. Ben. 5. p. 659) by Osbern, precentor of Canterbury, in 1070, and that by Eadmer in 1121, in Wharton, T. I. p. 211. See also John of Glastenbury, in his history of the abbey, published by Mr Hearne, T. I. p. 115. ad p. 147. likewise Henschenius, T. 4. Maij. p. 344.

M A Y XX.

ST BERNARDIN OF SIENNA, C.

From his two lives written with great exactness by two of his intimate friends; the one the same year in which he died, by Barnaby of Sienna; the other by Maffei Veggio, soon after his death. See Henschenius, T. 5. Maij. p. 257.

A. D. 1444.

ST BERNARDIN, a true disciple of St Francis, and an admirable preacher of the word of God, inflamed with the most ardent love of our divine Redeemer, was made by God an instrument to kindle the same holy fire in innumerable souls, and to inspire them with his spirit of humility and meekness. He was born at Massa in 1380, of the noble family of Albizeschi, in the republic of Sienna. He lost his mother when he was but three years-old, and his father, who was chief magistrate of Massa, before he was seven. The care of his education devolved on a virtuous aunt called Diana, who infused into his tender soul ardent sentiments of piety towards God, and a tender devotion to his blessed Mother. This aunt always loved him as if he had been her own son; and indeed his towardly dispositions won him exceedingly the affections of all who ever had the care of him. He was modest, humble and devout; and took great delight in prayer, visiting churches, serving at mass, and hearing sermons, which he would repeat again to his companions with an admirable memory, and gracefulness of action. In that tender age he had a great compassion for the poor. One day it happened that his aunt sent away a poor person from the door without an alms, because there was but one loaf in the house for the dinner of the family. Bernardin was much troubled to see the beggar go away unrelieved, and said to his aunt: "For God's sake, let us give something to this poor man: otherwise I will neither dine nor sup this day. I had rather the poor should have a dinner than myself." This wonderfully comforted his good aunt, who never ceased to incite him to all virtues, and according to his strength to accustom himself by degrees to fasting. Young as he was, he fasted every Saturday in honour of the Blessed Virgin: which pious custom he always continued. At eleven years of age he was called to Sienna by his uncles, and put to school under the ablest masters, who all admired the quickness of his parts, and the solidity of his judgment; but much more his docility, modesty, and virtue. If he chanced to hear any word the least unbecoming, he by blushing testified what confusion it gave him, and how much it wounded his very heart: and though he was otherwise most condescending, civil and respectful to all, he could never bear with patience any indecent discourse. For a single word of that kind he so severely reprimanded a man of quality, that it was to him a warning during the remainder of his life to govern his tongue: and many years after, hearing Bernardin preach, he was so moved, that he seemed to be drowned in tears. The modesty of the virtuous youth was a check to the most impudent, and kept them in awe in his presence: in whatever company, if the conversation was too free, it was dropped when he appeared, and the very loosest rakes would say: "Hush: here comes Bernardin:" as the presence of Cato among the Romans, restrained the lewd libertinism of a festival. (a) Nor did the saint behave on these occasions in such a manner as might render virtue the subject of ridicule, but with a surprising dignity. Nevertheless, an impure monster had once the insolence to make an attempt upon his virginal purity, and to solicit him to sin. But the saint, not content to testify his scorn and indignation, excited the whole troop of his little innocent play-fellows against the lewd villain, who pelted him with clods and stones, and made him ashamed any more to shew his face. Bernardin was exceeding comely and beautiful: but his known virtue secured him from any farther assaults; and he never ceased to beg of God the grace of purity, particularly through the intercession of the Blessed Virgin Mary. When he had completed the course of his philosophy, he applied himself to the study of civil and canon law, and afterward to that of the holy scriptures, with such ardour that he could never from that time relish any other study.

At seventeen years of age, he enrolled himself in the confraternity of our Lady in the hospital of Scala, to serve the sick. Here he began with new vigour to tame his flesh by severe fasts, watchings, hair-shirts, disciplines, and other austerities: but he applied himself more to the interior mortification of his will, which rendered him always most mild, sweet, patient and affable to every one. He had served this hospital four years, when, in 1400, a dreadful pestilence which had already made great havock in several other parts of Italy, and was increased by the concourse of pilgrims to the jubilee, reached Sienna; insomuch that twelve, eighteen or twenty persons died every day in this hospital, and among others were carried off almost all the priests, apothecaries and servants that belonged to the place. Bernardin therefore persuaded twelve young men to bear him company in the service of the hospital, expecting heaven for their speedy recompence: and they all strove which should come up the nearest to Bernardin in chearfulness, humility and

(a) Martial, epigr.

assiduity, in performing the most abject offices, and in exerting themselves in the service of the sick. The saint was entrusted in a manner with the whole care of the hospital, which, in the space of four months, he put into excellent order. It is hardly credible how many lives he saved, or with what charity and pains he night and day attended the patients, and furnished them with every comfort and succour which it was in his power to afford them. God preserved him from the contagion during these four months, at the end of which the pestilence ceased. He then returned home, but sick of a fever which he had contracted by his fatigues, which obliged him to keep his bed four months; during which time he edified the city, no less by his resignation and patience, than he had done by his charity. He was scarce well recovered, when he returned to the like works of charity, and with incredible patience attending a dying aunt for fourteen months, named Bartholomæa, a woman of great piety, who was blind and bed-ridden. When God had called her to himself, Bernardin retired to a house at some distance from the city, making the walls of his garden the bounds of his inclosure. Here in solitude, fasting and prayer, he endeavoured to learn the will of God in the choice of a state of life. After some time, he took the habit of the Order of St Francis, among the fathers of the Strict Observance, at Colombiere, a solitary convent, a few miles from Sienna; and after the year of his noviciate, made his profession on the eighth of September 1404. Having been born on the feast of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin, out of devotion to her, he chose the same day for the principal actions of his life: on it he took the religious habit, made his vows, said his first mass, and preached his first sermon. His fervour increased daily; and whilst some sought interpretations to mollify the severity of the rule, he was always studying to add to it greater austerities and heroic practices of virtue, the more perfectly to crucify in himself the old man. He was pleased with insults and humiliations, and whatever could be agreeable to the most ardent spirit of humility and self-denial. When he went through the streets in a thread-bare short habit, the boys sometimes cast stones at him, with injurious language: in which contempt the saint found a singular joy and satisfaction. He shewed the same sentiments, when a near kinsman with bitter invectives reproached him, as disgracing his friends by the mean and contemptible manner of life he had embraced. These and all other virtues he learned in the living book of Christ crucified, which he studied night and day, often prostrate before a crucifix, from which he seemed one day to hear our Lord speak thus to him: "My son, behold me hanging upon a cross: if thou lovest me, or art desirous to imitate me, be thou also fastened naked to thy cross, and follow me; thus thou wilt assuredly find me." In the same school he learned an insatiable zeal for the salvation of souls, redeemed by the blood of Christ. Having in retirement prepared himself for the office of preaching, his superiors ordered him to employ his talent that way for the benefit of others. He laboured under a natural impediment from weakness and hoarseness of voice: the removal of which obstacle he obtained by addressing himself to his glorious patroness the mother of God. For fourteen years his labours were confined to his own country: but when the reputation of his virtue was spread abroad, he shone as a bright light to the whole church.

In vain doth the minister of God confide in the weak resources of mere human eloquence and pomp of words, by which he rather debases the dignity and majesty of the sacred oracles. Whilst he pleases the ear, and gains the applause of his audience, he leaves their hearts dry. The great apostle of Andalusia, the venerable holy John D'Avila, being desired to lay down some rules for the art of preaching, answered, he knew no other art than the most ardent love of God and zeal for his honour. He used to say to young clergymen, that one word spoken by a man of prayer would do more good, and have a more powerful influence, than all the most eloquent discourses: for it is only the language of the heart that speaks to the heart:

and a life of mortification and prayer not only draws down the dew of the divine benediction upon the labours of the preacher, but it replenishes his soul with a sincere spirit of humility, compunction and all virtues, and with an experimental knowledge and feeling sense of the great truths which he delivers. Zealous ministers, who are filled with the spirit of God, are a great blessing to the people among whom they labour: and this reflection unfolds the secret, how saints possess so extraordinary a grace of converting souls to God. This was the excellent talent of Bernardin. They who heard him preach, felt their souls to melt in sentiments of compunction, divine love, humility, and the contempt of the world, and returned home new men, striking their breasts, and bathed in tears. The word of God was in his mouth as a fire, and as a hammer breaking the hardest rocks. Another eminent preacher of his Order being asked the reason why his sermons did not produce equal fruit with those of Bernardin, answered: "Brother Bernardin is a fiery glowing coal. What is only warm hath not the power of kindling a fire in others like the burning coal." The saint himself being consulted what was the way to preach with profit, gave this rule: "In all your actions seek in the first place the kingdom of God and his glory, direct all you do purely to his honour; persevere in brotherly charity, and practise first all that you desire to teach others. By this means the Holy Ghost will be your master, and will give you such wisdom and such a tongue, that no adversary will be able to stand against you." This he faithfully practised, and from his assiduous communication with God he imbibed that eminent spirit of virtue which gave him the most powerful ascendant over the hearts of men. Among the great truths of religion, he principally laboured to inculcate a sincere contempt of the vanity of the world, and an ardent love of our Blessed Redeemer. He wished he could cry out with a trumpet which could be heard over the whole earth, that he might sound aloud in the ears of all men that great oracle of the Holy Ghost: O ye sons of men, how long will you be dull of heart? Why do you love vanity, and seek after lying? (1)

O children, how long will you love childishness? (2)
 And he never ceased with the thunder of his voice to raise men from grovelling always on this earth, to the important consideration of the things which belong to their eternal welfare, and to the love of Jesus Christ. So much was he affected with the mysteries of the incarnation and sufferings of the Son of God, that he could never pronounce his sacred name without appearing in transports of love and adoration. Often at the end of his sermon, he shewed to the people the sacred name of Jesus curiously cut on a board with gold letters, inviting them to adore Christ with him on their knees, reciting a pious doxology. This was misconstrued by some, who also cavilled at certain expressions which he had used. Upon their complaints, pope Martin V. summoned him to appear, and commanded him silence for a while. The humble saint meekly acquiesced, without making any reply. But his Holiness, after a full examination of his doctrine and conduct, dismissed him with his benediction, high commendations, and ample leave to preach every where. The same pope pressed him to accept the bishopric of Sienna in 1427; but he declined that dignity, alleging for his excuse, that if he were confined to one church, he could no longer employ himself in the service of so many souls. In 1431, he no less resolutely refused that of Ferrara, which Eugenius III. earnestly desired to confer upon him, and again that of Urbino in 1435. When the saint preached first at Milan, the haughty duke Philip Mary Visconti (b) took offence at certain things which he had said in his sermons, and threatened him with death, if he should presume to speak any more on such subjects : but the saint declared, that no greater happiness could befall him than to die for the truth. The duke, to try him, sent him a present of 100 ducats of gold in a golden bowl. The saint excused himself from receiving the money to two different messengers ; but being compelled by a third to accept it, he took the messenger with him to the prisons, and laid it all out in his presence in releasing debtors. This disinterestedness turned the duke's aversion into the greatest veneration for the saint ever after.

(1) Psal. iv. 3.

(2) Prov. i. 22.

(b) In him was extinct the family of Visconti, descended by a younger branch from one of the Lombard kings. They were first viscounts, or deputy-governors, and afterward dukes of Milan; which sovereignty, upon the death of Philip Mary Visconti, in 1447, devolved upon Francis Sforza, his general, to whom he had given his natural daughter in marriage. Whence ensued the bloody wars between the emperors, French and Milanese.

St Bernardin preached several times through the greatest part of Italy ; some say also in Spain : but this seems uncertain. Nothing was more spoken of over all Italy than the wonderful fruit of his sermons ; miraculous conversions, restitution of ill-gotten goods, reparations of injuries, and heroic examples of virtue. The factions of the Guelfs and Gibellins then horribly divided many cities in Italy, and gave frequent employment to the saint. Hearing once of a great dissention at Perugia, he hastened thither from the marquise of Ancona, and entering the city, thus addressed the inhabitants : " God, who is highly offended at this division among you, hath sent me as his angel to proclaim peace to men of good will upon earth." After preaching four sermons to persuade them to a mutual forgiveness of all injuries, and a general amnesty, at the end of the last, he bade all those who forgave each other, and desired to live in peace, to pass to the right-hand. All present did so except one young nobleman, who staid on the left, muttering something between his teeth. The saint, after a severe reproach, foretold him his sudden death, which happened soon after, and without the benefit of the sacraments. In 1433, he accompanied the emperor Sigismund to his coronation at Rome : after which he retired for a short time to Sienna, where he put the finishing hand to his works. (c)

(c) They are printed at Paris in 1636, in 5 Tomes, fol. They treat chiefly on prayer, divine love, the life of Christ, and the last things. F. John de la Haye has published a new complete edition of this saint's works, printed at Venice in 1745, in 5 vols. fol.

Amidst the greatest applause and honours the most sincere humility always appeared in his words and actions; and he ever studied to conceal the talents with which God had enriched him. How great his esteem of humility was, he testified when a brother of his Order asked him the means by which he might speedily arrive at perfection. The saint, instead of giving him any answer by words, threw himself at his feet; shewing at the same time his own great affection to humility, and also that this virtue raises the soul to divine love and every grace. God, however, was pleased to honour his servant before men. Besides several predictions, and miraculous cures of many lepers, and other sick persons, the saint is recorded to have raised four dead to life. He was appointed vicar-general of his Order of the Strict Observance in Italy, in 1438, in which he settled a rigorous reformation; but after five years obtained a discharge from his office: and in his old age continued the function of preaching through Romania, Ferrara and Lombardy. He returned to Sienna in 1444, preached a most pathetic farewell sermon at Massa on concord and unity, and being taken ill of a malignant fever on the road, still preached as usual till he arrived at Aquila in Abruzzo. There, being confined to his bed, he prepared himself for his passage out of this life by the rites of the church. When he was speechless, he made a sign to be taken off his bed, and laid upon the floor; where, lifting up his eyes to heaven, he surrendered his pure soul into the hands of his Creator, on the 20th of May, 1444, after a life of 63 years, 8 months, and 13 days. His tomb was rendered illustrious by many miracles, and he was canonized by Nicholas V. in 1450. His body is kept in a chrystal shrine, enclosed in one of silver, in the church of his Order at Aquila.

ON THE SAME DAY.

St. ETHELBERT, King of the East-Angles, M. In his childhood, after the hours of his studies, he stole away from his school-fellows when they went to play, and spent most of the time allotted to recreation in prayer. He succeeded young his father Ethelred in his kingdom, which he ruled forty-four years, according to the maxims of a perfect saint. It was his usual saying, that the higher a station is in which a man is placed, the more humble and benevolent he ought to be. And this was the rule of his own conduct. To secure the tranquillity of his kingdom by an heir, he was persuaded to marry; and having heard much of the virtue of Alfreda, the daughter of Offa, the powerful king of the Mercians, he thought of making her his royal consort. In this design he paid a visit to that king, who resided at Sutton-Wallis, on the river Lugg, four miles from the place where Hereford now stands. He was courteously entertained, but after some days treacherously murdered by Grimbert, an officer of king Offa, through the contrivance of queen Quendreda, that his kingdom might be added to their own. This happened in 793. He was privately buried at Maurdine or Marden: but his body being glorified by miracles, it was soon after removed to a fair church at Fernley, that is, Heath of Fern, now called Hereford; which town had its rise from this church, which bore the name of St Ethelbert when Wilfrid king of Mercia much enlarged and enriched the same. Quendreda died miserably within three months after her crime. Her daughter Alfreda devoted herself to God, and led a penitential solitary life at Croyland amidst the fens. Offa endeavoured to atone for the sin of his queen by a pilgrimage to Rome, where he founded a school for the English, after the example of king Ina, who had erected one in that city in 726, when he established the Peter-pence among the West-Saxons, which Offa on this occasion extended to the Mercians in 794. Egfrid, the only son of Offa, died after a reign of some months, and the Mercian crown was translated into another family of the posterity of Penda. How sharp are the thorns of ambition! whereas virtue finds its peace and crown whether in adversity or in prosperity. See Harsfield, Malmesbury, and Leland Itiner. T. 8. p. 56. who quotes the life of St Ethelbert written by Giraldus Cambrensis: also by Osbert de Claro.

B. Yvo, Bishop of Chartres, C. The Order of Regular Canons of St Austin gave to the church a bright light in the person of this holy and learned prelate, one of the greatest ornaments of the eleventh age. Yvo was of an illustrious family, and born in the territory of Beauvais. His first studies of grammar and philosophy he performed in his own country, in which, by carefully cultivating a rich genius, he made great progress. Holy meditation and prayer were at the same time his favourite daily exercises, and accompanied with the love of silence, recollection, humility and great abstemiousness. A constant attention to the divine presence was a practice which he had always much at heart, this being the method by which he happily consecrated all his time, studies, and even necessary recreation to God. For it was his constant endeavour to make all his employments and actions serve this end, to promote the sanctification of his soul, and advance the glory of God. In all he did he had this only aim. This manner of life he continued in the monastery of Bec, in which he studied theology under the celebrated Lanfranc. Guy, bishop of Beauvais, having founded a monastery of Regular Canons of St Austin's Order near that city, under the patronage of St Quintin, in 1078, Yvo took there the clerical habit, bestowed on that house a part of his estates, and was employed in teaching theology and expounding the canons and holy scriptures. Some time after he was chosen superior under the title of provost or abbot, and governed that community about fourteen years. He was careful in the first place to give his scholars a great ardour for the practice of devout prayer, frequently repeating this great maxim, which students who desire to become truly disciples of Christ, ought always to have deeply imprinted in their minds, that "A spirit of prayer and interior compunction give more of that divine science which contributes to the sanctification of souls than studies," to use the words of the devout Richard of St Victor. (1) The discipline of this Order was at that time very austere. The pious F. Simon Gourdan has demonstrated (2) that these canons never eat either flesh or fish, and observed almost perpetual silence unless duties of charity obliged them to speak. Compunction and prayer were their first and principal employment, though they also applied themselves to the instruction of the people and the study of sacred sciences. And so perfect was their obedience to their diocesans or bishops (3) that it may be justly proposed as a model for imitation. The monastery of St Quintin's was raised to such a pitch of reputation for discipline, piety and learning, under the government of St Yvo, that, to satisfy the demands of bishops and princes from all sides, he was obliged to send many of his canons to other places, either to reform ancient chapters, or to found new ones.

(1) Rich. a S. Victore, in Benjamin Major. l. 4. c. 6.

Geoffrey, bishop of Chartres, being accused of simony and other crimes, and deposed by pope Urban II. in 1091, the clergy and people demanded Yvo for their bishop. This election was confirmed by the pope, and king Philip gave him the investiture, by putting a crosier into his hand. Yvo set out immediately for Rome, and was consecrated by the pope, who checked the endeavours of Richer, archbishop of Sens, then metropolitan of Chartres, to re-establish Geoffrey. King Philip, falling in love with Bertrade, third wife of Fulk, count of Anjou, resolved to marry her, and to divorce his queen Berta, though he had by her two children. Yvo was invited by the king with other prelates to conference on that subject. He strenuously endeavoured to divert the prince from so scandalous a project; and when he found all he could say or do to prevent it was to no purpose, he refused to be present at the marriage. Philip caused him to be imprisoned, and sent his officers to plunder his lands. He was however released some time after upon the remonstrances made to the king by the pope and several prelates of the kingdom. During his custody he prevented a sedition being raised against the king by the principal noblemen of his diocese, (4) and he concealed for a long time the letters of the pope against that prince's adulterous marriage, (5) lest the malecontents should make them a pretence for taking up arms against him. For the same reason he for a considerable time did not publish the sentence of excommunication which the pope had fulminated against the king. But he assisted with joy at the council which Richard, the legate of the holy see, held at Baugenci, in 1104, for that prince's absolution. (6) Philip dying the year following, his son Lewis, to prevent seditions, was consecrated at Orleans by Daimbert, archbishop of Sens. Yvo by a circular letter (a) answered the complaints made by

(2) Gourdan, Vies & Maximes des hommes illustres, qui ont fleuri dans l'abbaye de S. Victor a Paris. MSS. in 7 vol. folio, T. 1. p. 156. to 480.

(3) ib. p. 818.

(4) Yvo Carnot. ep. 20. (5) ep. 23. (6) ep. 144.

(a) The most famous work of St Yvo is his Decree, drawn from decretal letters of popes, canons of councils, and rules and maxims laid down by the fathers, divided into seventeen parts. Several in the beginning of that century had begun to make such compilations. One made at that time by Godon abbot of Bonneval in the diocese of Chartres, and another soon after by the monks of Tron, which was the model of Gratian's famous Decree, are found in MSS. in the king's library at Paris. (Hist. Liter. T. 7. p. 150.) The Collection of Decrees compiled in the eighth century by an unknown Isidorus surnamed Mercator, the source of the false Decretals, was made without order or method. That of Burchard, the pious bishop of Worms, who died in 1026, is very ample and methodical. St Yvo's is no more than this work with some few additions. It became immediately of great authority in the schools, and in ecclesiastical courts. The Decree of Gratian, compiled by a Benedictin monk of that name, at Bologna in Italy, in the twelfth century, is more ample, and is placed in the body of the Canon Law, though the passages have no authority from this collection, but only that of the popes or councils by which they were framed. The best edition of St Yvo's Decree is that given us by F. Fronteau.

St Yvo's Panormia Juris is an abridgment of these decrees, which the author seems to have compiled before the aforesaid larger work. It is divided into eight parts.

His Letters, 288 in number, illustrate several points of history and discipline. His 24 sermons, which have reached us, shew him to have been an excellent director in the paths of an interior life; of which the two in which he gives us a solid and pious exposition of the Lord's Prayer and the Apostles Creed, are alone a sufficient proof. These compose the accurate edition of his works given at Paris in 1647, by F. Fronteau, to whom the royal abbey of St Genevieve is indebted for the archbishop of Rheims. (7) St Yvo died on the 23d of December, in 1115, having governed his see twenty-three years. Pope Pius V. in 1570 granted an office in his honour to the whole Order of Regular Canons, on the 20th of May; and his name is commemorated on this day in the martyrology of that Order confirmed by Benedict XIV. His festival is kept in the diocese of Chartres, and the large shrine in which his sacred remains are exposed to public veneration, is shewn in the rich treasury belonging to the stately cathedral. See St Yvo's letters, and his life compiled by F. Fronteau, the learned Genovevan Regular Canon, and prefixed to his works. The Bollandists have inserted the same in their great work with remarks. Fabricius also published it among the Opuscula of F. Fronteau at Hamburg in 1720, reprinted at Verona in 1733. See also Ceillier, T. 21. p. 423. and Hist. Liter. de la France, T. 10. and 11.

(7) Ep. 183.

for the first foundation of an excellent library of which it is possessed, and who died in 1662.

Henry Wharton (in Auctario ad Usserium de Scripturis sacrisque vernaculis, p. 359) proves from the testimony of a MS, copy of the Micrologus, wrote in or near his own time, that Yvo of Chartres was the author of this famous work. In the printed copies we have only 62 chapters on the ceremonies of the Mass, and the festivals of the year. In this MS. are found 71 chapters, in the eight first of which the canonical hours of the breviary are explained. See the book, T. 18. Bibl. Patr. p. 471. Alcuin who died at St Martin's at Tours in 804. Walafridus Strabo, monk of Fulde, afterward dean of St Gall's and lastly abbot of Richenow near Constance, where he died in 849, and Amalarius, deacon of Metz, afterward abbot, who died about the year 850, had treated the same subject; but no one seems to have given more solidly in general the mystical explanations of the sacred ceremonies than the author of the Micrologus. To steer between the opposite extremes of those who seek a mystical meaning in every circumstance in all sacred rites, and those who with Claude de Vert have too little regard to it, our best guides are Gourdan, on the Mysteries and Festivals, Le Brun, on the Liturgies, Benedict XIV. on the Sacrifice of the Mass, the Catechism of Montpellier, and Lewis Assemani.

MAY XXI.

ST FELIX OF CANTALICIO, C.

From the acts of his beatification, and from his life written by F. John Baptist of Perugia. See Papebroke ad 18 Maij. T. 4. p. 203.

A. D. 1587.

ST FELIX was born of poor, but virtuous parents, at Cantalico, near Citta Ducale, in the Ecclesiastical State, in 1513. For his extraordinary piety he was, from his infancy, surnamed the Saint. At the time when in his childhood he kept cattle, and when afterwards he followed tillage and husbandry work, he was careful to sanctify his labour by a perfect spirit of penance. And he accompanied all his actions with devout prayer, so as even then to lead the life rather of a hermit than of a country labourer. He watched during part of the night in holy meditation, and to his painful life he added the austerity of rigorous abstinence and fasting. He contrived, without prejudice to his work, every day to hear mass, and he declined the ordinary amusements of those of his age. Oft in the fields when he had drove his cattle into some solitary pasture, he would pray for several hours together at the foot of some tree, before a cross which with his knife he had cut in the bark. At twelve years of age his father put him out to service, in quality, first of shepherd, and afterwards of husbandman, in the family of Mark Tully Pichi, a virtuous gentleman who lived at Citta Ducale. In his tender years, before the faculties of his mind were sufficiently opened to qualify him for deep reflection and long meditation, his prayer chiefly consisted of the Our Father, Hail Mary, Creed, and Glory be to the Father, &c. especially of certain petitions of the Lord's Prayer, which he seemed almost never to cease repeating in the fields with wonderful devotion. He was yet young, when he learned to habituate himself to the practice of holy meditation during his labour, and he soon attained to the perfection of heavenly contemplation, whereby the fire of divine affections is readily kindled in the heart by the least thought on God, as touchwood catches the flame: whereas holy meditation calls in the succour of reasoning, drawn from the truths of faith, to excite ardent affections of virtue in the soul. It is a mistake to imagine that this exercise requires learning or sublime thoughts. Pious meditation is not a dry philosophical speculation. It chiefly consists in the affections of the will, and in profound sentiments of adoration, praise, compunction, humility and other virtues. To be capable of this exercise, it is enough that a person has an understanding to know God, and a heart capable of feeling the power of his love. The most ignorant man can repeat often to God that he desires earnestly to love him, and always to glorify his holy name; he can bewail his ingratitude and sins, confess his weakness, and implore the divine pity and succour. To do this well, the most essential dispositions are humility and simplicity of heart; and to this holy art there is no greater enemy, than that worldly science which swells the mind with secret self-sufficiency and pride. Even in a religious house this gift may be often denied to many who are distinguished by their learning or dignities (1), whilst an illiterate fervent lay-brother, who by perfect humility, obedience and self-denial, has crucified in his heart all self-love and inordinate attachments to creatures, finds wings continually to soar to God by high contemplation. Even in the world our saint, whilst he followed the plough, attained this gift. The tractableness and instinct of the beasts, the painfulness of his labour, the barrenness of the earth accursed by sin, the vanity of the world, the blindness of sinners, the sight of the heavens, the obedience of all nature, the beauty of the verdant fields, the watered lawns, and hanging forests: every object served to raise his heart to the praise of his Creator, or excite him to deplore in his sight his own spiritual miseries, and his distance from Him. In God, in himself, and in all creatures round about him, he found a perpetual fund of pious thoughts and affections: but the sufferings of our Divine Redeemer were the most tender object of his devotions: and he was never weary in contemplating that great mystery, nor in paying to his loving Saviour the homages of adoration, love and thanksgiving, renewing always the most perfect dedication of himself to his service. He was most humble, charitable, meek, and always cheerful. He spoke little, shunned the company of those whose conduct appeared irregular, abhorred all murmurs, complaints and impatience. No injury or insult could provoke him to anger; and if any one reviled him, he was wont to say with an engaging sweetness: "I pray God, you may become a saint." The servant of God found all the means of perfect sanctification in his condition in the world: but God was pleased, for his greater advancement, to call him to a penitential religious state: to which grace two accidents contributed to dispose him. As he was one day driving the plough, at the sight of his master, who came up dressed in black, the young oxen started, and dragged the plough over his body: yet he received no hurt. Gratitude for this merciful deliverance inspired him with an ardent desire of consecrating himself to the divine service. And by hearing soon after the lives of some of the ancient fathers of the desert read at his master's house, he became extremely desirous to imitate them.

(1) See Boudon, Regne de Dieu dans l'ame. c. 1.

The state of a lay-brother among the Capuchin friars seemed to him best to suit his design. He therefore petitioned for the habit, and was admitted to it at Citta Ducale. The guardian, when he gave him the habit, shewed him a crucifix, explaining to him what our Saviour had suffered for us, and in what manner we ought to imitate him by a life of humiliation and self-denial. At that moving sight, Felix burst into a flood of tears, and felt in his breast a vehement desire of bearing in himself, by the mortification of the flesh, the image of the sufferings of that Man-God, by which he might resemble his crucified master, and subdue in himself the old man. He performed his noviciate at Anticoli, and appeared already filled with the perfect spirit of his Order, especially with a sincere love of poverty, humiliations and the cross. He often cast himself at the feet of his master of novices, earnestly begging him to double his penances and mortifications, and to treat him with greater harshness and severity than the rest, who, he said, were more docile, and naturally more inclined to virtue. By this holy hatred and contempt of himself, he laid the foundation of so eminent a degree of sanctity, that his fellow-religious usually called him the Saint. He was 30 years of age when he made his solemn vows in 1545. Four years after which he was settled in the convent of his Order in Rome, and appointed Questor, whose office it is to collect the daily alms for the subsistence of the community. This office requires a person of eminent virtue and prudence, and already perfect in the spirit of his Order, who may be able to resist that of the world, which is that of covetousness and dissipation, capitally contrary to his strictest obligations (a). But the frequent occasions of humiliation, contempt and suffering, which attend this action, afford occasions for the exercise of penance, humility, patience, meekness, and other virtues. In this circumstance Felix thought himself most happy: for no ambitious man is more greedy of honours than Felix appeared to be of contempt, which out of sincere humility he looked upon as his due. His recollection suffered no interruption. He never spoke unless obliged by necessity, and then in very few words, and with an edifying prudence and humility. He walked with his eyes cast down, but his heart was always raised to God by prayer. No objects seemed to turn his mind from heavenly things, because he restrained his eyes from curiosity or vanity, and considered God and his will in every thing. He was much delighted with acts of praise, adoration and thanksgiving; and he often repeated to others the words Deo gratias, inviting them to join with him in thanking God for all things. With the leave of his superiors, who placed an entire confidence in his piety and discretion, he assisted the poor abundantly out of the alms which he gathered. He visited the sick with the most tender charity, and sucked himself their most loathsome ulcers. He admonished sinners, and exhorted all to piety, especially dying persons, with a most moving unction and prudence. St Philip Neri often conversed with him, being wonderfully delighted with that excellent spirit of humility and piety which he discovered in his soul, and in his whole deportment. When St Charles Borromeo had sent the rules which he had drawn up for his Oblates at Milan to St Philip Neri, begging him to revise them, St Philip excused himself and referred the book to our poor lay-brother. St Felix declined the commission, alleging that he was an illiterate person. But being commanded in obedience to hear the rules read to him, to speak to every part, and direct what he thought best to be altered, he obeyed. And some things of great moment he advised to be expunged as too difficult : with which St Charles complied, expressing his admiration at our humble saint's heavenly discretion (b).

(a) See on this F. Dijon, Capuchin friar, Tr. des oblig. des Relig.
T. 2.

He always preserved his purity unspotted both in mind and body, guarding it by the strictest watchfulness over his senses, especially his eyes : and he never looked any woman in the face. He walked always barefoot even without sandals, and chastised his body with incredible austerities ; he wore a shirt of iron links and plates studded with rough spikes ; and when he could do it, without too remarkable a singularity, he fasted on bread and water : on the three last days in Lent, he eat nothing at all. He privately used to pick out of the basket the crusts left by the other religious for his own dinner. He watched a great part of the nights in prayer, allowing himself only two or three hours for sleep, which he usually took on his knees, leaning his head against a faggot, or lying down on the boards, or on twigs. At the least sign given him by any superior, he was always ready to do whatever was ordered him. He always called himself the ass, or beast of burden to serve the community, and regarded himself as one who was not to be ranked among the religious brethren. He thought himself unworthy even to converse with them: and on that account, when with them, he spoke very little. If any one contradicted him in indifferent things, he readily acquiesced in what they said, and was silent. When he eat alone, and thought no one saw him, he practised excessive austerities; but when he dined in company with others, he endeavoured ordinarily to shun any singularity that could be taken notice of. It was his study to conceal from others as much as possible all heavenly favours which he received, and to avoid whatever might give them a good opinion of him. He disguised his mortifications under various pretences, and excused his going without sandals, saying he walked more easily without them, but suppressed the inconveniences he felt in that mortification. In serving at mass, he was sometimes so overpowered by the abundance of his tears, and transported in extasies of divine love, that he was not able to answer the priest. The fire of divine love which burned in his breast, made him often sing short spiritual canticles, which it also inspired him to compose in a plain simple style, but full of heavenly sentiments. In singing them he was often seen quite ravished and absorpt in God. He had the most ardent devotion to the passion of Christ, and, in meditating on it, usually watered the ground with abundant tears. The habitual union of his heart with God made him often not perceive others near him, and sometimes he did not know who had been his companion abroad. When a certain brother in religion asked him, how he could preserve so perfect a recollection amidst the variety of objects which he met in his office abroad; he answered: "Why, brother, every creature in the world will raise our hearts to God, if we look upon it with a good eye." The extraordinary raptures, with which he was often favoured in prayer, are not to be expressed by words. He performed the office of the brother Questor for his community in Rome forty years. When he was grown old, the cardinal-protector, who loved him exceedingly for his extraordinary virtue, told his superiors that they ought now to ease him of that burden. But Felix begged that he might be shewn no indulgence, lest by receiving earthly favours, he should be deprived of those which are heavenly ; for the soul grows more sluggish, if the body be too much cherished. Being seventy-two years old, he foretold his death to several companions, and to certain persons that lay dying. He soon after fell sick of a fever, and was comforted by a vision of the Blessed Virgin, accompanied with many holy angels. Shortly after this favour, he in great spiritual joy expired on the 18th of May 1587. Many miracles were juridically approved, and St Felix was beatified by Urban VIII. in 1625, and canonized by Clement XI. in 1721, though the bull of his canonization was only published by Benedict XIII. in 1724. (2) His body remains in the church of his Order in Rome.

(b) See the life of St Philip Neri, printed at Venice in 1727. Also Saxius, Annot. in S. Caroli, hom. 120. T. 4. p. 229.

St Felix, though little in the eyes of the world, and in his own, was great before God. The poverty of a Lazarus, abandoned by all, but suffering with patience, resignation and humility, is something far more glorious and more desirable than the most glittering scepters. God will condemn the renowned exploits of those false divinities of the earth, who have filled the world with the sound of their name : but he crowns the least desire of an humble heart, employed in loving him. A person who lives in the world is bound to make all his actions perfect sacrifices to God, and purity of intention converts the works of any secular calling into the works of God. But this can only be formed and maintained in a life in which a constant spirit of piety animates the soul, and a considerable time is reserved for exercises of interior devotion. Let no man take sanctuary in purity of intention, who suffers the works of his secular profession, much less company or pleasures, to ingross his soul, and entirely to usurp his time. A life of business, and still more a life of pleasure, entangle and ensnare the mind, and leave in it a peculiar relish which is incompatible with pure heavenly desires, and a value for those maxims of the gospel wherein true heavenly wisdom consists, or with a serious constant application to the mortification of self-love and the passions.

(2) Bullar. Roman T. 13. p. 89.

ON THE SAME DAY.

St GODRICK, Hermit. He was born of very mean parents. at Walpole in Norfolk, and in his youth carried about little peddling wares, which he sold in villages. Having by degrees improved his stock, he frequented cities and fairs, and made several voyages by sea to traffic in Scotland. In one of these he called at Holy Island, or Lindisfarne, where he was charmed and exceedingly edified with the retirement and religious deportment of the monks, and especially with the account which they gave him of the wonderful life of St Cuthbert. He enquired of them every particular relating to him, visited every corner of that holy solitude, and of the neighbouring isle of Farne, and falling on his knees, prayed with many tears for grace to imitate the fervour of that saint in serving God, resolving for that purpose to give up all earthly pretensions. He entered upon a new course of life by a penitential devout pilgrimage to Jerusalem, and visited Compostella in his way home. After his return into Norfolk, he accepted the charge of house-steward in the family of a very rich man. The servants were not very regular, and for their private junkettings, often trespassed upon their neighbours. Godrick finding he was not able to prevent these injustices, and that the nobleman took no notice of his complaints about them, being easy so long as he was no sufferer himself, left his place for fear of being involved in the guilt of such an injustice.

After making a pilgrimage to St Giles in France, and to Rome, he went to the north of England, in order the better to carry into execution his design of devoting himself wholly to a retired life. A fervent servant of God named Godwin, who had passed a considerable time in the monastery of Durham, and, by conversing with the most holy monks, and exercising himself in the interior and exterior practices of all virtues, was well qualified to be a director to an unexpe-rienced novice, joined our saint, and they led together an austere anachoretical life in a wilderness situated on the north to Carlisle, serving one another, and spending both the days and nights in the praises of God. After two years God called Godwin to himself by an happy death after a short sickness. St Godrick, having lost his companion, made a second painful pilgrimage to Jerusalem. After his return, he passed some time in the solitude of Streneshalch, now Whitby: but after a year and some months went to Durham, to offer up his prayers before the shrine of St Cuthbert, and from thence retired into the desert of Finchal or Finkley, three miles from Durham, near the river Were. St John Baptist and St Cuthbert he chose for his principal patrons and models. The austerities which he practised are rather to be admired than imitated. He had his regular tasks of devotion, consisting of psalms, and other prayers which he had learned by heart, and which he constantly recited at midnight, break of day, and the other canonical hours, besides a great number of other devotions. Though he was ignorant of the very elements of learning, he was too well experienced in the happy art of conversing with God and his own soul, ever to be at a loss how to employ his time in solitude. Whole days and nights seemed too short for his rapturous contemplations, one of which he often wished with St Bruno he could have continued without interruption for eternity, in inflamed acts of adoration, compunction, love or praise. His patience under the sharpest pains of sicknesses or ulcers, and all manner of trials, was admirable: but his humility was yet more astonishing. His conversation was meek, humble and simple. He concealed as much as possible from the sight and knowledge of all men whatever might procure their esteem, and he was even unwilling any one should see or speak with him. Yet this he saw himself obliged to allow on certain days every week to such as came with the leave of the prior of Durham, under whose care and obedience he lived. A monk of that house was his confessor, said mass for him, and administered him the sacraments in a chapel adjoining to his cell, which the holy man had built in honour of St John Baptist. He was most averse from all pride and vanity, and never spoke of himself but as of the most sinful of creatures, a counterfeit hermit, an empty phantom of a religious man: lazy, slothful, proud, and imperious, abusing the charity of good people who assisted him with their alms. But the more the saint humbled himself, the more did God exalt him by his grace, and by wonderful miraculous gifts. For several years before his death, he was confined to his bed by sickness and old age. William of Newbridge, who visited him during that time, tells us, that though his body appeared in a manner dead, his tongue was ever repeating the sacred names of the three Divine Persons, and in his countenance there appeared a wonderful dignity, accompanied with an unusual grace and sweetness. Having remained in this desert 63 years, he was seized with his last illness, and happily departed to his Lord, on the 21st of May 1170, in the reign of Henry II. His body was buried in the chapel of St John Baptist. Many miracles confirmed the opinion of his sanctity, and a little chapel was built to his memory, by Richard, brother to Hugh Pidsey, bishop of Durham. See William of Newbridge, l. 2. c. 20. Matthew Paris, Matthew of Westminster, his life wrote by Nicholas of Durham, his confessarius, and abridged by Harpsfield, Sæc. 12. c. 45. See also the English calendars, and those of the Benedictins, especially Menard's and Edw. Maibew. Likewise Henschenius, T. 5. Maij. p. 68.

MAY XXII.

ST YVO, C.

From the information taken for his canonization, twenty-seven years after his death, and from the bull itself. See Dom Morice, Hist. de la Bretagne, T. 1, ad an. 1303. Papebroke ad 19 Maij. T. 4. p. 583. Lobineau, Vies des Saints de la Bretagne, p. 245.

A. D. 1303.

ST YVO HELORI, or son of Helor, descended from a noble and virtuous family near Treguier in Brittany, was born in 1253. He studied grammar at home with unusual application and success, and at fourteen years of age was sent to Paris, where he learned the liberal arts and divinity; he applied himself to the civil and canon law at Orleans. His mother was wont frequently to say to him, that he ought so to live as became a saint, to which his answer always was, that he hoped to be one. This resolution took deep root in his soul, and the impression of this obligation was in his heart a continual spur to virtue, and a check against the least shadow of any dangerous course. The contagious example of many loose companions at school served only to inspire him with the greater horror of evil, and moved him to arm himself more vigorously against it. The gravity of his behaviour reclaimed many from their vicious courses. His time was chiefly divided betwixt study and prayer: and for his recreation he visited the hospitals, where he attended the sick with great charity, and comforted them under the severe trials of their suffering condition. During his ten years stay at Paris, whither he was sent at 14 years of age, and where he went through a course of theology and canon law, he was the admiration of that university, both for the quickness of his parts, and his extraordinary piety. He continued the same manner of life at Orleans, where he studied the decretals under the celebrated William de Blaye, afterward bishop of Angouleme, and the institutions under Peter de la Chapelle, afterward bishop of Toulouse and cardinal ; but he increased his austerities and penance. He chastised his body with a hair shirt, always abstained from meat and wine ; fasted all Lent and Advent, and on many other days in the year on bread and water, and took his rest, which was always very short, lying on a mat of straw, with a book or stone under his head for a pillow ; and he never lay down till he was quite overpowered with sleep.

He made a private vow of perpetual chastity : but this not being known, many honourable matches were proposed to him, which he modestly rejected as incompatible with his studious life. He long deliberated with himself whether to embrace a religious or a clerical state ; but the desire of serving his neighbour determined him at length in favour of the latter. He desired indeed, out of humility, always to remain in the lesser orders : but his bishop compelled him to receive the priesthood, a step which cost him many tears ; though he had qualified himself for that sacred dignity by the most perfect purity of mind and body, and by a long and fervent preparation. Maurice the archdeacon of Rennes, who was formerly by his office perpetual vicar of the bishop, appointed him official or ecclesiastical judge for that diocese. St Yvo protected the orphans and widows, defended the poor, and administered justice to all with an impartiality, application and tenderness, which gained him the good will even of those who lost their causes. He never pronounced sentence without shedding many tears, always having before his eyes the tribunal of the sovereign judge, where he himself was one day to appear, and to stand silent at the bar.

Many bishops strove who should be so happy as to possess him : his own prelate Alan le Bruc bishop of Treguier carried the point, and obliged him to leave Rennes. The saint by his care soon changed the face of this diocese, and reformed the clergy. The bad feared him, the good found in him a father, and the great ones respected him. Though himself a judge, in quality of official, he solicited causes in favour of the poor in other courts, pleaded them himself at the bar, and visited and comforted the prisoners. He was surnamed the advocate and lawyer of the poor. Once not being able to reconcile a mother and a son, who pleaded violently against each other, he went and offered up mass for them, and they immediately came to an agreement together. He never took a fee, but pleaded all causes without any gratuity. His bishop Alan le Bruc nominated him rector of Trësdrètz, and eight years after his successor Geoffrey Tournemine, of Lohanec, one of the most considerable parishes of the diocese, which he served ten years till his death. He always rose at midnight to matins, and said every day mass with incredible devotion and fervour. In his preparation he continued long prostrate, quite absorpt in the consideration of the abyss of his own nothingness, and of the awful majesty of Him to whom he was going to offer sacrifice, and the sanctity of the victim. He usually rose bathed in tears, which continued to flow abundantly, during the whole time he was celebrating the divine mysteries. Upon accepting the first curacy he laid aside furs and every other ornament in dress which his former dignity obliged him to wear, and he ever after used the meanest and plainest ecclesiastical garments that could be worn. His fasts and austerities he rather increased than abated; fasting, as we observed already, Lent, Advent and all vigils, and Wednesdays, Fridays and Saturdays every week, so severely as to allow himself no other refection than bread and water. On other days he only added to his meal a potage of pease or other pulse or herbs, and on the principal festivals of the year a couple of eggs. Tears trickled from his eyes whenever he spoke on spiritual things, which were the usual subject of his discourse: and such was the energy of his words as penetrated the souls of his hearers. He preached often in distant churches, besides his own, and sometimes thrice or five times on the same day. All differences were referred to him, and he took care to reconcile the parties. He built a house near his own for an hospital of the poor and sick; he washed their feet, cleansed their ulcers, served them at table, and eat himself only the scraps which they had left. He distributed his corn, or the price for which he sold it, among the poor immediately after the harvest. When a certain person endeavoured to persuade him to keep it some months, that he might sell it at a better price, he answered: "I know not whether I shall be then alive to give it." Another time the same person said to him: "I have gained a fifth by keeping my corn." "But I," replied the saint, "an hundred-fold by giving it immediately away." On a certain occasion, when he had only one loaf in his house, he ordered it to be given to the poor: but, upon his vicar's complaint at this, he gave him one half of it, and divided the other half among the poor, reserving nothing for himself. Providence never failed him in his necessities. During the Lent in 1303, he perceived his strength daily to decay; yet, far from abating any thing in his austerities, he thought himself obliged to redouble his fervour, in proportion as he advanced nearer to eternity. On the eve of the ascension he preached to his people, said mass, being upheld by two persons, and gave advice to all who addressed themselves to him. After this he lay down on his bed, which was a hurdle of twigs platted together, and received the last sacraments. From that moment he entertained himself with God alone, till his soul went to possess him in his glory. His death happened on the 19th of May 1303, in the 50th year of his age. (a) The greatest part of his relicks are kept in the cathedral of Treguier. Charles of Blois, duke of Britany, placed a portion in the church of our Lady at Lamballe, capital of his county (now the dutchy) of Penthièvre. From another portion given to the abbey of our Saviour, of the Cistercian Order, small distributions have been made to St Peter's at Louvain, to Mechlin, Gant, and other places. The duke of Britany John of Mont-

(a) The Franciscans place St Yvo among the saints of the Third Order of St Francis, and Gonzaga tells us that he took the habit at Quimper. But Papebroke denies this circumstance. See T. 4. Maij. p. 538. ad diem 19.

fort (competitor with Charles of Blois for that dutchy, which after his death was carried by his valiant widow, and enjoyed by his son) went to Rome to solicit his canonization, declared that under a distemper being given over by physicians, he was restored to his health by imploring St Yvo's intercession. Many other miracles were proved before the commissaries of John XXII. in 1330, and St Yvo was canonized by Clement VI. in 1347. His festival is celebrated in the several dioceses in Britany, and his name occurs in the Roman martyrology on the 19th of May. The university of Nantes puts itself under the special protection of his patronage. The Bretons founded a collegiate church in his honour at Paris in 1348. The chapel of Kirmartin, where the saint lived, which was first dedicated under the patronage of the Blessed Virgin, now bears his name: a church of Rome, and several others in other places, are built in his honour.

St Yvo was a saint amidst the dangers of the world. But he preserved his virtue untainted, only by arming himself carefully against them, by conversing assiduously with God in prayer and holy meditation, and by most watchfully shunning the snares of bad company. Without this precaution all the instructions of parents, and all other means of virtue, are ineffectual; and a soul is sure to split against this rock, which does not steer wide of it. God preserved Toby faithful amidst the Samaritan idolaters, and Lot in Sodom itself; but he will never protect those who voluntarily seek danger, and court destruction. Who, for pleasure or amusement, would choose to live in a pest-house, continually to converse with persons infected with the plague, and to breathe an empoisoned air? The maxims both of reason and religion command us to fly from out of the midst of Babylon, that is, from the company of abandoned sinners, whose very conversation and deportment secretly spread a baneful influence over our minds.

ON THE SAME DAY.

St BASILISCUS, Bishop of Comana in Pontus, M. He received the crown of martyrdom, together with St Lucia, in Nicomedia, in 312, under the tyrant Maximinus Daia. Peace being soon after restored to the church, his body was honourably brought back to Comana. St Chrysostom died in the Presbyterium or community of the clergy belonging to the church of St Basiliscus. The martyr had before admonished the priest in a dream, to prepare a lodging for his brother John; and he comforted St Chrysostom by a vision, in which he bad him be of good courage, for the next day they should be together. See Palladius in vita Chrys. Theodoret, and Sozomen.

SS. CASTUS and ÆMILIUS, MM. They had first fallen in the persecution; but being touched with remorse, rose again with greater fervour, and triumphed over the flames. St Austin, in a sermon which he preached on their festival, says they fell like St Peter, by presuming on their own strength. They suffered in Africa, probably under Decius, in 250. See St Cyprian de lapsis, St Austin, serm. 285; and the old African martyrology of the fifth century.

St BOBO, C. He was a gentleman of Provence; and a great soldier, the father of the poor, and protector of his country against the Saracens, whom he often defeated; when they poured into Provence by sea from Spain and Africa. He afterwards led a penitential contemplative life for many years; and being on a pilgrimage to Rome, died at Voghera near Pavia in 985. His name is in great veneration in Provence, and his festival a holyday of precept in most cities in Lombardy. See his exact life in the Acta Sanctorum.

St CONALL, Abbot of Ennis-chavil in the county of Tyrconnel in Ireland. In this province, he is the most celebrated patron and titular saint of a most extensive parish, where he is honoured with extraordinary devotion; his feast is most famous, and the church and well which bear his name, are visited by pilgrims. See Colgan, MSS. ad 22 Maij.

M A Y XXIII.

ST JULIA. V. M.

From her authentic acts given by Ruinart. in an appendix to his edition of the history of Victor Vitensis, de persec. Vandal.

FIFTH AGE.

SHE was a noble virgin at Carthage, who, when that city was taken by Genseric in 439, was sold for a slave to a Pagan merchant of Syria. Under the most mortifying employments of her station, by cheerfulness and patience, she found, besides her sanctification, a present happiness and comfort, which the world could not have afforded. All the time she was not employed in her master's business was devoted to prayer and reading books of piety. She fasted very rigorously every day but Sunday; nor could all the intreaties of her master, who was charmed with her fidelity and other virtues, nor the hardships of her situation, prevail with her to be more tender of herself. The merchant thought proper to carry her with him in one of his voyages to Gaul, where he imported the most valuable commodities of the Levant. Having reached the northern part of Corsica, or that point now called Capo-Corso, he cast anchor and went on shore to join the pagans of the place in an idolatrous festival, kept there at that time, with the sacrifice of a bull. Julia was left at some distance, because she would not be defiled by the superstitious ceremonies, which she openly reviled. Felix, the governor of the island, who was a bigoted pagan, asked the merchant who this woman was, who dared to insult the gods. He informed him that she was a Christian, and that all his authority over her was too weak to prevail with her to renounce her religion; but that he found her so diligent and faithful, he could not part with her. The governor offered him four of his best female slaves in exchange for her. But the merchant, whose name was Eusebius, replied : " No : all you are worth will not purchase her ; for I would freely lose the most valuable thing I have in the world rather than be deprived of her." However, the governor, whilst Eusebius was drunk and asleep, took upon him to compel her to sacrifice to his gods. He proffered to procure her liberty if she would comply. The saint made answer, that she was as free as she desired to be, as long as she was allowed to serve Jesus Christ : and whatever should happen, she would never purchase her liberty by so abominable a crime. Felix, thinking himself derided by her undaunted and resolute air, in a transport of rage, caused her to be struck on the face, and the hair of her head to be torn off ; and lastly, ordered her to be hanged on a cross till she expired. Certain monks of the isle of Gorgon (which is now called la Gorgona, and lies between Corsica and Leghorn) carried off her body ; but, in 763, Desiderius king of Lombardy, removed her relicks to Brescia, where her memory is celebrated with great devotion.

St Julia, whether free or a slave, whether in prosperity or in adversity, was equally fervent and devout. She adored all the sweet designs of providence ; and far from complaining, she never ceased to praise and thank God under all his holy appointments, making them always the means of her virtue and sanctification. God, by an admirable chain of events, raised her by her fidelity to the honour of the saints, and to the dignity of a virgin and martyr.

ON THE SAME DAY.

St DESIDERIUS, Bishop of Langres, M. The good shepherd is always ready, in imitation of his divine model, to lay down his life for his sheep. Such this holy pastor approved himself. When certain pagan barbarians ravaged that part of Gaul, St Desiderius, accompanied with his clergy, went out to meet them ; but was massacred with his followers, and fell a victim to save his flock. Sigebert says this happened in the invasion of Chrocus, the German king, under Gallien : but Tillemont thinks it rather ought to be placed

In 411, when the Alans, Sueves, and Vandals, plundered that country. See Tillemont, T. 11. p. 540. Gall. Christ. Nov. T. 4. p. 510.

St DESIDERIUS, Bishop of Vienne, M. When queen Brunehaut governed the courts of her two sons, Theodbert king of Austrasia, and Theodoric of Burgundy, this zealous pastor boldly reprov'd her for her incests and cruelties; but a sermon which he preached before her and Theodoric, on chastity, chiefly in the words of St Paul, procured him the crown of martyrdom. For, in his return home, he was, by their order and contrivance, murdered by three assassins, in a village now called St Didier de Chalaraine, near the brook of that name, in the principality of Lombes, in 612. See Fredegarius, Aimoinus, Jonas, &c. quoted by Henschenius, the Bollandist; and Acta vel Passio S. Desiderii M. a Sisebuto Rege (Hispaniæ) composita, published by Flores, Espana Sagrada, T. 7. Append. 4. p. 337.

M A Y XXIV.

ST VINCENT OF LERINS, C.

See his Componitorium adversus Hæreticos, with the English preface of Mr Reeves, T. 2. Also Ceillier, and Orsi; and his Justification and Life in Papebroke, Acta Sanctorum. T. 5. p. 284.

A. D. 450.

ST VINCENT was of Gaulish extraction, had a polite education, was afterwards for some time an officer in the army, and lived with dignity in the world. He informs us in his prologue, that, having been some time tossed about in the storms of a bustling military life, he began seriously to consider the dangers with which he was surrounded, and the vanity and folly of his pursuits. He desired to take shelter in the harbour of religion, which he calls the safest refuge from the world (a). His view in this resolution was, that he might strenuously labour to divest his soul of its ruf-

(a) In portum religionis cunctis semper fidissimum. Prolog. Componit.

ling passions of pride and vanity, and to offer to God the acceptable sacrifice of an humble and christian spirit; and that, being farther removed from worldly temptations, he might endeavour more easily to avoid not only the wracks of the present life, but also the burnings of that which is to come. In these dispositions he retired from the crowds of cities, and made for the desired haven with all the sail he could. The place he chose for his retirement was in a small remote island, sheltered from the noise of the world. This Gennadius assures us to have been the famous monastery of Lerins, situated in the lesser of two agreeable green islands which formerly bore the name of Lerins, not far from the coast of Lower Provence towards Antibes. In this place he shut himself up, that he might attend solely to what God commands us, and study to know him. Vincent reflected that time is always snatching something from us: its fleeting moments pass as quick as they come; never, never more to return: as water which is gone from its source runs to it no more. Our course is almost run out: the past time appears as a shadow; so will that which is now to come, when it shall be once over, and no tears, no intreaties, no endeavours, can recall the least moment we have already let slip unimproved. In these reflections the fervent servant of God assures us, that he earnestly strove to redeem time. (1) and to be always turning it to the best account, that this invaluable grace might not rise up at the last day in judgment against him. He considered that true faith is necessary to salvation no less than morality, and that the former is the foundation of Christian virtue: and he grieved to see the church at that time pestered with numberless heresies which sucked their poison from their very antidote, the holy scriptures, and which by various wiles spread on every side their dangerous snares. To guard the faithful against the false and perplexing glosses of modern subtle refiners, and to open the eyes of those who had been already seduced by them, he, with great clearness, eloquence, and force of reasoning, writ a book which he entitled, A Commonitory against Heretics, which he composed in 434, three years after the general council of Ephesus had condemned the Nestorians. He had chiefly in view the heretics of his own times, especially the Nestorians and the Apollinarists, but he confuted them by general, clear principles, which overturn all heresies to the end of the world. Together with the ornaments of eloquence and erudition, the inward beauty of his mind, and the brightness of his devotion, sparkle in every page of his book.

(1) Col. iv. 5.

Out of humility he disguises himself under the name of Peregrinus, to express the quality of being a pilgrim or stranger on earth, and one by his monastic state in a more particular manner estranged from the world. He styles himself The least of all the servants of God, and less than the least of all the saints, unworthy to bear the holy name of a Christian. He layeth down this rule or fundamental principle; in which he found, by a diligent enquiry, all catholic pastors and the ancient fathers to agree, that such doctrine is truly catholic, as hath been believed in all places, at all times, and by all the faithful. (b) By this test of universality, antiquity and consent, he saith, all controverted points in belief must be tried. He sheweth, that whilst Novatian, Photinus, Sabellius, Donatus, Arius, Eunomius, Jovinian, Pelagius, Celestius, and Nestorius, expound the divine oracles different ways; to avoid the perplexity of errors, we must interpret the holy scriptures by the tradition of the catholic church, as the clue to conduct us in the truth. For this tradition, derived from the apostles, manifesteth the true meaning of the holy scriptures, and all novelty in faith is a certain mark of heresy; and in religion nothing is more to be dreaded than itching ears after new teachers. He saith: "They who have made bold with one article of faith, will proceed on to others: and what will be the consequence of this reforming of religion, but only that these refiners will never have done, till they have reformed it quite away." (2) He elegantly expatiates on the divine charge given to the church, to maintain inviolable the sacred depositum of faith. (3) He takes notice that heretics quote the sacred writings at every word, and that in the works of Paulus Samosatenus, Priscillian, Eunomius, Jovinian, and other like pests of Christendom, almost every page is painted and laid on thick with scripture texts, which Tertullian also remarks. But in this, saith St Vincent, heretics are like those poisoners or quacks who put off their destructive potions under inscriptions of good drugs, and under the title of infallible cures. (4) They imitate the father of lies, who quoted scripture against the Son of God when he tempted him. (5) The saint adds, that if a doubt arise in interpreting the meaning of the scriptures in any point of faith, we must summon in the holy fathers who have lived and died in the faith and communion of the catholic church, and by this test we shall prove the false doctrine to be novel. For that only we must look upon as indubitably certain and unalterable, which all or the major part of these fathers have delivered, like the harmonious consent of a general council: But if any one among them, be he ever so holy, ever so learned, holds any thing besides, or in opposition to the rest, that is to be placed in the rank of singular and private opinions, and never to be looked upon as the public, general, authoritative doctrine of the church. (6) After a point has been decided in a general council, the definition is irrefragable. These general principles, by which all heresies are easily confounded, St Vincent explains with equal elegance and perspicuity. (c) His diction is pure and agreeable, his reasoning close and solid; and no controversial book ever expressed so much, and such deep sense in so few words. The same rules are laid down by Tertullian in his book Of Prescriptions,

(b) Quod ubique, quod semper, quod ab omnibus creditum est. Hoc est etenim verè proprièque catholicum. Com. c. 3.

(2) C. 29. (3) C. 27. & 30. (4) C. 31. (5) C. 32. (6) C. 33.

(c) The best edition of St Vincent's Commonitorium is that given by Baluze. On the eminent usefulness of this book see Orsi, and that learned Roman controvertist, the late cardinal Gotti, in his book against John Clerc.

by St Irenæus and other fathers. St Vincent died in the reigns of Theodosius II, and Valentinian III. consequently before the close of the year 450 (d). His relics are preserved with respect at Lerins, and his name occurs in the Roman martyrology.

St Vincent observes (7) that souls which have lost the anchorage of the catholic faith, "are tossed and shattered with inward storms of clashing thoughts, that by this restless posture of mind, they may be made sensible of their danger; and, taking down the sails of pride and vanity, which they have unhappily spread before every gust of heresy, they may make all the sail they can into the safe and peaceful harbour of their holy mother the catholic church; and being sick from a surfeit of errors, may there discharge those foul and bitter waters, to make room for the pure waters of life. There they may unlearn well what they have learned ill, may get a right notion of all those doctrines of the church they are capable of understanding, and believe those that surpass all understanding."

ON THE SAME DAY.

SS. DONATIAN and ROGATIAN, MM. There lived at Nantes an illustrious young nobleman called Donatian, who having received the holy sacrament of regeneration led a most edifying life, and laid himself out with much zeal in converting others to faith in Christ. His elder brother Rogatian was not able to resist the moving example of his piety, and the force of his discourses, and desired to be baptized. But the bishop having withdrawn and concealed himself for fear of the persecution, he was not able to receive that sacrament.

(7) C. 25.

(d) The Vincentian objections against the doctrine of St. Austin could not come from the pen of St. Vincent, who condemns with great warmth Pelagius and his followers over and over again, and highly extols the letter of Celestine to the bishops of Gaul; in which that pope reprehends their neglect of watchfulness and duty in suffering the profane novelties of Semi-pelagianism to spring up and grow among them. We find two other Vincents living at Marseilles at that very time, and there might be others of the same name; one of whom might be a Semi-pelagian.

but was shortly after baptized in his blood. For he declared himself a Christian at a time when to embrace that sacred profession was to become a candidate for martyrdom. The emperor Maximian sent an order to the prefect, directing him to put to death all who refused to sacrifice to Jupiter and Apollo. This must have happened when that emperor was in Gaul occupied in his expedition either against the Bagaudæ in 286, or against Carausius, who having assumed the purple in Britain, maintained himself in that usurped dignity seven years. The acts of these martyrs attribute this order to the emperors Dioclesian and Maximian, but we find it usual to ascribe to both those emperors the decrees of one. The prefect to whom it was addressed seems to have been the cruel persecutor Rictius Varus, prefect of the Belgic, and probably also of the Celtic Gaul. The title of president, which the Acts give him, only belonged to a governor who had power of life and death. The prefect arriving at Nantes, Donatian was impeached before him for professing himself a Christian, and for having withdrawn others, particularly his brother, from the worship of the gods. Donatian was therefore apprehended, and having boldly confessed Christ before the governor, was cast into prison and loaded with irons. Rogatian was also brought before the prefect, who endeavoured first to gain him by flattering speeches, but finding him inflexible, sent him to prison with his brother. Rogatian grieved that he had not been able to receive the sacrament of baptism, and prayed that the kiss of peace which his brother gave him, might supply it. Donatian also prayed for him that his faith might procure him the effect of baptism, and the effusion of his blood that of the sacrament of chrism, that is, of confirmation. They passed that night together in fervent prayer. They were the next day called for again by the prefect, to whom they declared that they were ready to suffer for the name of Christ whatever torments were prepared for them. By the order of the inhuman judge they were first stretched on the rack, afterward their heads were pierced with lances, and lastly cut off, about the year 287. (a) Their bodies were buried near the place where they suffered. The Christians some time after built them a sepulchre,

(a) The martyrdom of these saints cannot be placed in the great persecution in 303, as some have imagined. On the 1st of March 291, Constantius Chlorus and C. Galerius-Valerius-Maximianus, were created Cæsars; the latter had Italy for his portion of the empire, and the former Gaul beyond the Alps and Britain. Constantius died at York, on the 25th of July 306. We are assured by Lactantius, (de morte Persecut. c. 15. and 16.) Eusebius, (Vit. Constant. c. 13, 15, 16, and 17.) and St Optatus (l. 1. de Schism. Donat.) &c. that Constantius never suffered any one to be put to death for the Christian religion. It is therefore clear that the martyrs who suffered in Gaul and Britain under Dioclesian and Maximian, ought to be placed in the beginning of their reign; such as Gereon and his companions at Cologne; Cassius, Florentius, Victor, and some others in the same place: Justus at Paris, Fuscian and Victorius at Amiens, Piat at Tournay, Lucian at Beauvais, Quintin at Peronne, Crispin and Crispinian at Soissons, &c. before the year 291. After Maximian Herculeus had martyred the Thebæan Legion, he sent Rictius Varus prefect into the Belgic and Celtic Gaul, who at Triers, St Quintin's, Basil, Amiens, &c. exercised unheard of cruelties against the Christians from 286 to his death in 288. His successor Julian put to death St Yon in the province of Lyons, and St Lucian at Beauvais. Eutychius and Asterius, mentioned in the trial of St Victor at Marseilles, seem also to have been prefects of the prætorium in Gaul, and perhaps succeeded Julian in 290, or 291. As for Sicinnius Fescenninus who put to death St Dionysius of Paris and St Nicasius in the Vexin, he seems to have been governor of the second province of Lyons, which was then extended farther northwards than in later ages. SS. Fides and Caprais suffered at Agen under a judge named Dacian. St Alban, &c. seem to have been crowned in Britain before Carausius assumed the purple in 287. Eusebius (l. 8. c. 1. & 4.) in describing the peace which the church enjoyed before the great persecution, is chiefly to be understood of the East. For it is clear that not only Maximian but Dioclesian also, when he came to Rome, in the first year of his reign persecuted the Christians, probably out of complaisance to the Romans. Priser, wife to Dioclesian, and his daughter Valeria who was married to Maximian Galerius, were very favourable to the Christian religion, and seem both to have embraced it. (See Lactant. de mort. Persec. c. 15.) For in 303, they refused to be defiled with sacrifices, till compelled for fear of torments. This they probably learned from Lucian, chamberlain to Dioclesian, a zealous Christian, to whom St Theonas, who governed the see of Alexandria from 288 to 300, sent an excellent instruction, extant in d'Acheri's Spicilegium, T. 12. p. 545. The empress was not a Christian when it was wrote. Lucian seems to have died before the great persecution in 303, in which Dorotheus, Gorgonius, and other officers of the palace, were crowned with martyrdom. And at the foot of which the bishops of Nantes chose their burial-place. Toward the close of the fifth century the Christians built a church upon the place, which has been successively in the hands of monks and canons, and is at present parochial. The bodies of these two martyrs in 1145 were translated by Albert, bishop of Ostia, to the cathedral, where they remain in great veneration. See their authentic Acts, though they seem only to have been wrote in the fifth century, in Ruinart, Act. Sincer. p. 279. Tillemont, T. 4. p. 491. Ceillier, T. 3. p. 362. Lobineau, Vies des Saints de la Bretagne, p. 2.

St JOHN de Prado, Priest, M. He was a native of the kingdom of Leon in Spain, and embraced in his own country the austere Order of the Barefooted Observantin Franciscans. Being sent by the authority of the Congregation de Propagandâ Fide to preach the faith in the kingdoms of Fez and Morocco, he discharged himself with so great zeal that the Mahometans cast him into a dungeon loaded with chains. The holy confessor suffered with constancy and joy most cruel scourgings and other inhuman torments, and consummated his martyrdom by fire, on the 24th of May, on which his name is inserted in the Franciscan martyrology, by order of Benedict XIV. He was solemnly beatified by Benedict XIII. in 1728. See that pope's Bull, T. 10. Bullar. part. 4. p. 333.

And Dorotheus is said in his Acts (26 Decemb.) to have then been chamberlain. This note answers the objections which some critics have raised against the history of so many martyrs who suffered in the West about the beginning of Dioclesian's reign: when it is certain that the persecution of Carinus was still carried on in several governments. The governors were always enraged against the Christians, under a pretext that the edicts against them had not been revoked. See Tillemont, Mem. de l'histoire de l'eglisse, T. 5. p. 3-

M A Y XXV.

ST MARY MAGDALEN OF PAZZI, V.

From her life written by her confessarius Puccini, and from the Bull of her canonization. See Baert the Bollandist, T. 6. Maij. p. 177.

A. D. 1607.

THE family of the Pazzi was one of the most illustrious in the republic of Florence, and was allied to the sovereign house of Medicis: but the birth of this saint hath reflected on it greater glory than the long list of heroes, statesmen, governors and other great personages which it displays. Nor was her maternal family of the Blondelmonti inferior in rank, or less fruitful in great men. She was born in that city in 1566, and in honour of St Catharine of Sienna received her name in baptism. From the first dawn of reason there appeared in her the happy presages of that eminent virtue of which she became a perfect model. When only seven years old, she was so compassionate to the poor, that she was wont to deprive herself of her meat to give it to some beggar: and such was her devotion, that it was her custom to steal privately from the company of her playfellows, to spend her time in secret prayer. In her tender infancy she was accustomed to repeat often the Lord's Prayer, Hail Mary and Creed, and other devotions: and she taught other poor children the same with wonderful care and zeal. When her father carried her into the country, it was her custom and her delight to assemble together the little girls of the village, and to teach them what she knew of the Christian doctrine; which she did with wonderful modesty and patience. One day it happened that she had begun to instruct a young girl of one of her father's tenants in her catechism, when she was told that she must go back to Florence: but she cried so much at the thought of leaving her work of charity imperfect, that her father carried the other girl with them to the city, where the young saint finished her instruction. At eight or nine years of age she began more ardently to apply herself to holy prayer; and she employed whole hours in that exercise. In this divine school she learned the most perfect sentiments of all virtues, and began to feel so strong a desire to love and please God, that worldly amusements were tedious and bitter to her. She knew no pleasure but in speaking to God, or of God or heavenly things. She often left her bed in the night to lie on the floor or on straw. One day she made herself a crown of rushes interwoven with thorns, tied it on her head, and lay all night with it, suffering the pain which the pricks of the thorns gave her. To this action she was moved at nine years of age by a meditation on the sufferings of Christ; which mystery from that time was the chief object of her pious thoughts and devotions during the remainder of her life. Once on St. Andrew's day, in her meditation, her heart was so inflamed with a desire of suffering with and for Christ, that she swooned away; and her mother was afraid she was dying. After she was grown up and a nun, coming to herself from a like fit, she cried out: "O Love, this grace is like that which I received in my childhood, when my mother thought it a corporal disorder." By hair-shirts and other severe mortifications, she endeavoured to conform herself to Christ crucified, and put on her head in the night a platted crown of prickly olive branches. She always wept at the sight of any grievous corporal distress, and much more for any spiritual misery of her neighbour. Such was her tender devotion to the blessed eucharist; that she loved to be near those who came from the holy communion, as if by love she perceived the odour of Christ's presence. She made her first communion with wonderful devotion at ten years of age: and at twelve, by vow consecrated her virginity to God. At fourteen, her father being made by the grand duke governor of Cortona, she was placed by him a pensioner in the monastery of St. John in Florence. There she gave full scope to her devotion; and employed every morning four hours in pious meditation on her knees.

Out of humility, she usually kept at a distance from the nuns, whom she respected as the favourite spouses of Christ.

After fifteen months her father took her home, with the view of procuring her an honourable and advantageous match. Several proposals were made to her, and her parents were very pressing for her consent. But she protested, that the disposal of herself in marriage was no longer in her power. In the choice of a religious state, being much pleased with the custom of frequent, and almost daily communion, practised among the Carmelite nuns, she preferred that Order, and entered their monastery in St Fridian's suburb at Florence, on the eve of the Assumption, in 1582. She continued some days in a secular habit, that she might be the better acquainted with the rule. It is not to be expressed how much those holy and fervent virgins were edified by the great virtues which she practised. But her parents, after fifteen days, took her home again for three months, the better to try her vocation. However, she would by no means consent ever to put on fine clothes, or do any thing which seemed to favour vanity of sensuality. Having obtained their blessing, she, on the 1st of December, returned to the monastery, being then 15 years old, and took the habit on the 30th of January following. When the priest put the crucifix into her hands, saying those words: God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, (1) a seraphic ardour appeared in her countenance, and she felt herself inflamed with a burning desire of suffering during her whole life for Christ: and trampling under her feet all the vanities of the world, she gave herself most perfectly to Christ crucified with the most firm purpose never to have any other spouse. After taking the habit, she threw herself at the feet of her mistress; begging she would never spare her in the most sensible self-denials and humiliations. During her noviciate, the example of her fervour excited those who were witnesses of it to the divine love. Being visited by a severe fit of sickness, her desire of suffering for the love of Him who died for us, was a subject of edification to the whole house. One of her sisters asking her, how she could endure so much pain without any complaint, and even without speaking of her ailments, or ever asking for any thing to comfort her, she answered, pointing to a crucifix which was near the side of her bed: "See what the infinite love of God hath suffered for my salvation. This same love sees my weakness, and gives me courage. They who call to mind the sufferings of Christ, and offer their own to God through his passion, find their pains sweet and amiable." Under this illness, she was admitted to her religious profession on the 17th of May, 1584.

(1) Gal. vi. 14.

In religion, she changed her name Catharine into that of Mary Magdalen, out of devotion to that great model of penitent souls. After this consecration of herself to God, she enjoyed great heavenly consolations and frequent raptures during 40 days; especially after her communions; as if her heavenly spouse would, by these caresses, celebrate with her his spiritual nuptials. It is the general remark of the most experienced masters of a spiritual life, that God frequently visits souls upon their fervent conversion from the world, with his comforts; in which, by the divine lights which he infuses, they see their own nothingness, and advance in the sentiments of sincere humility; and are at the same time attracted by the feelings of his goodness to run in the sweet odour of his perfumes. This taste of his consolations encourages them to suffer trials with joy for his sake; and these never fail to succeed. For God, who is infinitely jealous of the hearts of his servants, will not suffer in them any rival. Wherefore, perfectly to crucify in them all secret self-love, that they may be fitted for vessels of his pure love, and to teach them thoroughly to know themselves, he throws them into the crucible of internal tribulation: and this fire is usually the more severe, the higher the degree of sanctity is to which he, in his mercy, designs to raise them. This our saint experienced by the state of interior desolation into which she fell from this first taste of his spiritual joy. But her virtue was solid, because humble, patient and constant. She desired not heavenly comforts, deeming herself of all others the most unworthy: and the favours which she received, she endeavoured to conceal from men: referring them entirely to the gratuitous goodness of their author, and from them learning the more to humble herself, and to raise her soul to the most pure love. It was always her desire to suffer for his sake, and this her thirst of the cross seemed insatiable. But whether in anguish or in consolation, the spring of her affections was the most ardent love of her heavenly spouse. She was often heard to cry out: "O Love! Love is not loved, not known by his own creatures! O my Jesus! if I had a voice strong and loud enough that I could be heard by all men in all the parts of the world, how would I cry out that this love might be known, loved and esteemed by all men as the only true incomprehensible good! but the cursed poison of self-love robs men of this high knowledge, and renders them incapable of it." She often invited, with all the fervour of her soul, all angels, men, stars, birds, beasts, plants, grains of sand, drops of water, and the whole chorus of the creation, to convert themselves into tongues, to praise, bless and magnify the divine immensity and love. She sighed and wept much for the conversion of sinners, and when called away by public duties, or obliged to go to rest, often said: "Is it possible that I should take any rest, whilst I consider how much God is offended on earth. O Love! I do it by obedience, and to fulfil thy holy will."

Fearing lest at the time of her profession she might have offended God by too eager a desire of making that sacrifice, she begged and obtained leave to live as a novice two years after her vows. This term being completed, coming out of the noviciate, she was made second directress of the extern young girls. Three years after, she finished her juniorate, or term amongst the young nuns, and was employed in instructing the novices. During these first five years, Almighty God was pleased to exercise her by most severe interior trials.

She fasted always on bread and water, except on Sundays and Holydays, on which she took Lenten diet. She added all other kinds of bodily austerities, and at the same time suffered most grievous pains and anguish of soul. She was assaulted with the most violent temptations of impurity, gluttony, pride, infidelity, and blasphemy. Her imagination was often filled with those abominations, the very name or thought of which fills chaste souls with the greatest horror. She had recourse by prayer to the Spouse, and to the Queen of virgins, against the obstinacy and rage of this enemy, and chastised her body with disciplines, hair-cloths, studded iron-girdles, lying hard, and the like inventions. Her mind was also troubled with the most hideous images of hellish monsters, and seemed abandoned like Job to the power of hell; and her soul was plunged into a state of darkness, in which she was able to see nothing but horror in herself and in all things about her. Thoughts of blasphemy and infidelity infested her so violently, that she sometimes cried out to her sisters: "Pray for me, that I may not blaspheme God instead of praising him." Fasting, which by habit and grace was formerly easy, now became grievous. Her sisters likewise despised her, looking on her foregoing graces, which they had formerly admired, to have been illusions. Nevertheless God did not totally withdraw himself from his faithful spouse. Her chief support and comfort was in the meditation of Christ's passion, in which she conceived fresh burning desires to become still more like that man of interior, as well as exterior, sorrows. After five years in this suffering state, God restored to her soul his holy peace, and the comfort of his divine presence. In 1590, on Whit-sunday at matins, when the Te Deum was intoned, she fell into a rapture, and, after the divine office, the joy which shone on her face, and appeared in her words, testified the return of her inward comforter. Squeezing by the hand the mother-prioress and the mistress of the novices, she desired them to rejoice with her, saying: "Now winter is passed with me; assist me to thank and glorify my good Creator." She was endued with a spirit of prophecy, and among other things foretold the popedom to Leo XI. and his death soon after his election.

In 1598, she was appointed mistress of the novices for three years, according to the custom of the house, and, in 1601, was continued in the same office: but, in 1604, chosen sub-prioress, which office she discharged till her death. Her union with God seemed uninterrupted, and his name sufficed to transport her soul in raptures of love. She often repeated the doxology Glory be to the Father, and always with incredible ardour, bowing her body, and offering herself to all labours, and every sort of death, for God's honour. She considered only the pure will of God in all things with inexpressible fervour, and often repeated: "The will of God is ever most amiable." And to her sisters: "How rich a traffic have we with God, when we do every thing with a pure and vehement intention to please and honour him!" She appeared in every action like a glowing seraph, glorifying her Creator with all the powers and strength of her soul, and sometimes cried out, "Come, souls, come, love your God who so much loveth you. O Love, I die with mortal anguish, when I see how little you are known and loved. O Love, Love! if you find no place to rest in, come all to me; I will lodge you. O souls created by Love, why do not you love?" She instructed her novices to sing the divine office with such awe and trembling in the company of the angels, as if they in spirit prostrated themselves at every word. If the divine office was sung too fast, she asked leave to go out, and would afterward say: "What business could you have of greater importance, that you were in such a hurry?" Her extreme thirst after the salvation of souls made her shed perpetual tears for the conversion of infidels, heretics, and sinners; and she often exhorted her sisters in the most moving manner to offer up all their actions for that end. Her devotion to the holy eucharist was extraordinary; and she used to say, that if it were necessary, she would joyfully enter the lion's den, and suffer all pains for the sake of communicating. But her humility was most admirable. She always spoke of herself as of the bane of her community, and the outcast and abomination of all creatures. It was her delight to be forgotten, contemned, reprimanded, and employed in the meanest offices. She would often cry out: "O nothingness! how little art thou known!" (a)

In 1602, she contracted a violent cold and cough, which, in 1603, was followed by the bursting of a vein, and an abundant vomiting of blood, which often returned upon her. However, she recovered a little, and in October 1604, she was chosen sub-prioress. The three last years of her life she endured violent headaches, fevers, sweats, pains in her breast, was subject to a spitting of blood, and a scurvy in her gums, by which she lost all her teeth. With these bodily pains she sometimes laboured under the most grievous inward spiritual dryness and desolation of soul; yet her prayer was to suffer more, to suffer without any comfort, to drink gall without any honey. Love on one side made her desire to die, to be united to her God: yet life seemed desirable, that she might still suffer for love. Having exhorted her sisters to fervour, and to the love of suffering, she received extreme-unction, and still communicated every day during the twelve days she survived. She expired soon after receiving the holy sacrament by way of viaticum, on the 25th of May 1607, being forty-one years, one month and twenty-four days old, of which she had lived twenty-four years and three months in the religious habit. Her body has been often examined, and always found without any corruption. It is kept in a sumptuous shrine in the church of her monastery, which was since removed into the city of Florence, in 1628. God has honoured it by frequent miraculous cures. The saint was beatified by Urban VIII. in the year 1626, and canonized by Clement IX. in 1669.

(a) F. Ferdinandi Salvi, sub-prior of the Carmes at Bologna, in Italy, made a collection of twelve letters of St Mary Magdalen of Pazzi, with several other monuments. They were reprinted at Venice in 1739, at the end of the spiritual works of this holy virgin. F. Salvi published in Italian several relations of miracles performed at Bologna through the intercession of this holy virgin, printed at Milan in the years 1724. 1730. 1731.

It was the prayer of this saint under her severest trials, that she might live only to glorify God by her patience and submission in suffering by his will, and for his sake (b) Our love of God must be very imperfect, since we are so impatient under the least trials, and so unwilling to suffer, and since we find the duties of religion troublesome and uneasy. They appear severe in the beginning of a virtuous life: but to him that has conquered, the yoke of Christ is easy, and to fervour and love harsh things become pleasant. It is also the property of an habit to render difficult things easy. For as it becomes a second nature, what flows from it is natural, consequently pleasant and easy. When the love of virtue has once rooted itself in the soul, its practice is no more than embracing and enjoying what we love. This therefore is one constant character of perfection in scripture, that delight and pleasure accompany the practice of virtue. The ways of wisdom are the ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace. (2) And to him that loves, the commandments of God are not grievous. (3) Hence it is that the good man's delight is in the law of the Lord, and he meditates therein night and day. (4) Nor does he delight less in action than meditation. The Psalmist frequently expresses an inconceivable joy and transport in the meditation and practice of the commands of God. (5) The first Christians, whose whole lives were a continued fervent exercise of devotion, faith and charity, are said to have eaten their meat with gladness and singleness of heart. (6) The Holy Ghost gives us a delightful description of the apostles as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, yet possessing all things. (7) Another property of divine love is, that it is always active, and

(2) Prov. iii. 17. (3) 1 John v. 3. (4) Ps. i. 2. (4) Ps. xviii.
(6) Act. ii. 46. (7) 2 Cor. vi. 10.

(b) Pati non mori.

never ceases to exert itself with zeal and fervour in all manner of good works.

ON THE SAME DAY.

St URBAN, Pope and Martyr. He succeeded St Calixtus in the year 223, the third of the emperor Alexander, and sat seven years. Though the church enjoyed peace under that mild reign, this was frequently disturbed by local persecutions raised by the people or governors. In the acts of St Cecily this zealous pope is said to have encouraged the martyrs, and converted many idolaters. He is styled a martyr in the sacramentary of St Gregory, in the martyrology of St Jerom, published by Florentinius, and in the Greek liturgy. It appears from Fortunatus, and several ancient missals, that the festival of St Urban was celebrated in France with particular devotion, in the sixth age. A very old church stood on the Appian road, dedicated to God, in honour of this saint, near the place where he was first interred, in the cemetery of Prætextatus. His body was there found, together with those of SS. Cecily, Tiburtius, and Valerian, in 821, and translated by pope Paschal into the church of St Cecily. Papebroke shews that it is the body of another martyr of the same name, famous in ancient records, which Nicholas I. sent in 862, to the monks of St Germanus of Auxerre, and which now adorns the monastery of St Urban, in the diocese of Challons, on the Marne, near Joinville. It is exposed in a silver shrine. See Tillemont, T. 3. p. 258.

St ADHELM, or rather ALDHELM, B. (1) He was born among the West-Saxons, and a near relation of king Ina, but had his education under St Adrian, at Canterbury. Maidulf, a pious Irish monk, founded a small poor monastery, called from him Maidulfsbury, corruptly Malmesbury. In this place Aldhelm took the monastic habit; and Maidulf, seeing his great virtue and capacity, resigned to him the abbacy in 675. The saint exceedingly raised its reputation, and increased its building and revenues. The church he dedicated in honour of St Peter, and added to it two others, the one in honour of the Mother of God, the other of St Michael. This abbey was rendered by him the most glorious pile of building at that time in the whole island, as Malmesbury testifies, who fills almost the whole second part of the life of this saint with extracts or copies of the donations, charters and privileges of many kings and princes granted to this house, with an ample indult of pope Sergius, which the saint made a journey to Rome to obtain. He was an enemy to gluttony, avarice, vain-glory, and all idle amusements, and watched assiduously in divine reading and holy prayer. He was the first among our English ancestors who cultivated the Latin and English or Saxon poesy, as he says of himself. His principal work is a treatise on the praises of virginity. (a) He inserts at length the high commendations which St Austin, St Jerom, and other fathers, bestow on that state, and gives abridged examples of many holy virgins. Among other mortifications, it was the custom of this saint to recite the psalter in the night, plunged up to the shoulders in water in a neighbouring pond. When Hedda, bishop of the West-Saxons, or of Winchester died, that diocese was divided into two, that of Winchester and that of Sherburn. St Aldhelm, who had been abbot thirty years, was taken out of his cell by force, and consecrated the first bishop of Sherburn, which see was afterwards removed to Salisbury. His behaviour in this laborious charge was that of a true successor of the apostles. He died in the visitation of his diocese at Dullinge, in Somersetshire, on the 25th of May, in the year 709, the fifth of his episcopal dignity. William of Malmesbury relates several miracles wrought by him, both whilst he was living, and after his death. His psalter, vestment, and several other memorials, were kept in his monastery till the dissolution. This abbey, the glory of Wiltshire, then fell, and in it was defaced the sepulchral monument of our king Athelstan. See William of Malmesbury, in Wharton's Anglia Sacra, T. 2. p. 1. and L. de Pontif. published by Gale. This latter work contains the history of this abbey. See also Mabillon, Sæc. 3. Ben. part 1. & Append. in Sæc. 4. part 1. and Papebroke ad 25 Maij.

(1) Aldhelm, signifies Old helmet.

(a) Henry Wharton has given us a far more correct edition than any former, at London in 1663, together with certain treatises of St Bede, and the Dialogue of Egbert, archbishop of York. On his Saxon pious verses, in which he excelled to a miracle, as Ealfrid testifies, and his other works, see Cave, and Fabricius, Bibl. med. Latinit. l. 1. p. 142. Tanner, de Script. Britan. &c. The first book which St Aldhelm wrote, was a confutation of the erroneous computation of the North-Britons in the celebration of Easter, De Erroribus Britannorum, sive De Circulo Paschali, which Malmesbury says was lost in his time: whence Fabricius tells us it is not now extant. Yet Mabillon and others doubt not but it is the 44th epistle among those of St Boniface, which treats on this subject, and is addressed to Geruntius, king of Damnonia among the West-Saxons: for the author styles himself Althelm, abbot.

St GREGORY VII. Pope, C. Before his exaltation to the popedom, he was called Hildebrand. He was born in Tuscany, and educated at Rome under his uncle, the abbot of our Lady's, upon the Aventin hill. He went afterwards into France, and embraced the monastic state at Cluni. Being called back to Rome, he signalized himself by his zeal, sanctity, and learning, and preached with great reputation and fruit in the court of the pious emperor Henry III. surnamed the Black. The holy pope St Leo IX. had the highest esteem for him, often followed his counsels, ordained him subdeacon, and made him abbot of St Paul's, which church then belonged to a very small community of monks, and lay at that time almost in ruins, the greatest part of its revenues being usurped by powerful laymen. Hildebrand recovered its lands, and restored the monastery to its ancient splendour. In 1054, he was sent by Pope Victor II. legate into France, in order to abolish the practice of simony in the collation of ecclesiastical benefices. He held for this purpose a council at Lyons, in which a certain bishop, who was accused of simony, denied the crime with which he was charged. The legate bad him recite the Glory be to the Father, which the bishop readily endeavoured to do. But he was never able to pronounce the name of the Holy Ghost. At this miraculous conviction he was struck with remorse and confusion, and casting himself at the legate's feet, humbly confessed his crime. This is related by pope Calixtus II. St Hugh of Cluni, William of Malmesbury, and St Peter Damian, (1) and the last mentioned author assures us, that he had the account from Hildebrand's own mouth. The legate presided also in the council of Tours, in which Berengarius retracted and condemned the heresy which he had broached, relating to the Holy Eucharist (2). Pope Stephen IX. sent him on an embassy to the empress, and dying, ordered his return to be waited for, and his advice to be followed in the election of a new pope. By his direction, Nicholas II., and, after his death, in 1061, Alexander II., were placed in St Peter's chair. This latter dying in 1073, Hildebrand, then archdeacon, was by compulsion exalted to the papacy. He left nothing unattempted to keep off that heavy burden from his shoulders, and, among other expedients, wrote to Henry IV. king of Germany, who was then in Bavaria, intreating him to interpose his authority, in order to prevail, that the project of his election might be set aside, declaring at the same time, that if he were pope, he could never tolerate his enormous and scandalous crimes. Notwithstanding this, Henry gave his assent to the saint's election, and he was consecrated pope on St Peter's day. In his letters he was not able to forbear expressing his most sensible grief, and he with tears implored the succour of the prayers of the whole church, for grace and fortitude that he might be enabled worthily to discharge his functions. Before his ordination, he wrote to the pious countesses Beathrice and Mathilda, advising them not to communicate with those bishops of Lombardy who had been convicted of simony, though king Henry espoused their interest; and he intimated to them a design of sending to that prince some pious persons who should give him wholesome advice, and exhort him to return to his duty (3). The scandals which simony caused in the church, called for an apostolic zeal in the chief pastor, to stem the torrent which was breaking into the sanctuary itself. The pope deposed Godfrey, archbishop of Milan, who had obtained that dignity by simony, and, in a council which he held at Rome, enacted a law, by which all persons that should be guilty of that sin, were declared incapable of receiving any ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and disqualified for holding any benefice whatever. This decree raised great murmurs in Germany, and the archbishop of Mentz was in danger of being murdered for labouring to put it in execution. Notwithstanding this opposition, the pope judged, that the more obstinate the evil was, the greater was the necessity of a severe remedy, and he stirred up all zealous pastors rather to lay down their lives than to be remiss in maintaining the laws of God and his church. He excommunicated Cencius, a rich and powerful nobleman of Rome, and some other persons, for certain notorious crimes. These sinners being incorrigible, grew desperate, and laid violent hands on the pope on Christmas night, in 1075. In committing this outrage, one of them attempting to strike off his head, gave him a deep wound, and the mutineers carried him to Cencius's castle. But the people rescued him the next day, and banished the conspirators. The pope himself recalled and pardoned them, by which mildness he overcame their malice. This storm was not over when he was overtaken by another far more boisterous, from a different quarter. Henry IV. king of Germany, who succeeded his pious father, Henry III., surnamed the Black, in 1056, when he was only ten years old, governed well so long as he followed the counsels of his mother Agnes, and became a good soldier. But having taken the reins into his own hands, he, by several acts of tyranny, alienated first the princes of the empire, and afterwards

(1) Opusc. 19. c. 6. (2) Anonym. Chifflet. de multiplici damnat. Bereng. and Pagi ad ann. 1055. n. 5.

(3) St Greg. c. x. ep. 11.

began grievously to oppress the church. He crushed a powerful rebellion of the Saxons in 1063; but in 1064, the dukes of Suabia, Carinthia, and Bavaria, taking up arms, gave him great disturbance, alleging that he had usurped several provinces to which he had no right, and that he had oppressed the liberty of the empire. When Gregory VII. was raised to the papacy, Henry wrote first to his holiness in the style of an humble penitent, condemning himself for having simoniacally sold the benefices of the church, usurped a pretended right of giving the investitures of bishoprics, and grievously abused it, in often promoting to ecclesiastical dignities persons most unworthy and unfit. The pope, on his side, had shewn an extreme concern for his salvation, had caressed him, and sent him many obliging and tender letters, though always breathing an apostolic zeal. Henry shewed, by his actions, that his pretended repentance was mere hypocrisy, for he continued to repeat the same crimes; and, perceiving the inflexible disposition of his Holiness, assembled at Worms, on the 23d of January 1076, a conventicle of simoniacal time-serving bishops, who presumed to depose him from the pontificate, on pretence of an imaginary nullity in his election. The king sent this mock sentence to the pope at Rome, together with a contumelious letter. Gregory, in a council at Rome, declared the king and his schismatical adherents excommunicated, and took upon him to pronounce, that for his tyranny he had forfeited his crown, which he again confirmed in 1080. Many princes of the empire chose Rodolph, duke of Suabia, emperor, in 1077, but that prince proved unfortunate in several battles, and died of the wounds which he received in one of them. Henry, on his side, set up Guibert, the excommunicated archbishop of Ravenna, for antipope; and, in 1084, entered Rome with an army, and besieged St Gregory in the castle St Angelo, but was obliged, by Robert Guiscard, the Norman, duke of Calabria, to retire, and the Tuscans gave his army a great overthrow in Lombardy.

(a) Three devout princesses were at that time the most strenuous protectresses of the Holy See, namely, Agnes the empress-dowager, who, after being removed from the regency during her son's minority, by a faction of the princes, retired to Rome 1062, and there died a nun in 1077. The other two were Maud or Mathilda, the most pious countess of Tuscany, (b) and Beatrice, her mother. They were ad-

(a) Henry after the death of St Gregory VII. carried on his contests with the popes Victor III. Urban II. and Paschal II. His own sons Conrad and Henry joined the malecontents against him. The first died in a short time; but the latter was so successful, that Henry IV. after suffering the severest checks of fortune, died at Liege in the year 1106, in the 46th year of his reign, and 56th of his age. His son Henry V. continued his quarrels about the investitures with Paschal II. Gelasius II. and Calixtus II. but made his peace with the last. His repeated perfidies to the princes of the empire and others, rendered him odious and despicable, and his reign unhappy. He died in 1125, leaving no issue by his wife the empress Maud, daughter of our Henry I. and grand-daughter of St Margaret. She afterward married Geoffrey Plantagenet, earl of Anjou, to whom she bore our Henry II. in whom, through her, the blood of our Norman kings was united with that of the English-Saxons from Edmund-Ironside.

(b) The countess Maud, or Mathilda, was daughter of Boniface, lord of Lucca, and Beatrice sister to the emperor Henry III. Her only brother survived her father a very short time; and by his death she became heiress of all his dominions, and sovereign of Lucca, Parma, Reggio, Mantua, good part of Tuscany, &c. She was married to Guelpho the younger, duke of Bavaria, but never had any children. She employed her revenues and forces, all her life, in charities, and in the service of the church, and gained great reputation by her eminent virtue, conduct, and valour. She often commanded her armies in person, and continued the protectress of St Gregory VII. till her happy death in 1115, in the 76th year of her age. She bequeathed good part of her dominions to the Holy See; they are since called the patrimony of St Peter, comprising Viterbo, Acqua pendente, Civita Vecchia, &c. See her life by Donizo the monk, with the remarks of Leibnitz and Muratori in Muratori's Scriptores Ital. T. 5. p. 337. Several additional pieces relating to her, ib. T. 6. p. 94. also Lambert of Aschafnab. Muratori's Annals, T. 12. and 13. Rome, with the territory beyond the Tiber called Campagna de Roma, and Ravenna, were conferred on the Holy See by king Pepin, who had rescued it from the tyranny of the Lombards. This donation was confirmed by Charlemagne, and several succeeding emperors. See the Dissertation of Orsi Della Origine del Dominio de Rom. Pontefici. And that of Cenni, On the Diplomas of Lewis D. bonnair, Otto I. and St Henry II.

miters and faithful imitatrices of the virtues of the pope, and were directed by his counsels in the paths of perfection. Amidst these storms, St Gregory enjoyed a perfect tranquillity of soul, having his heart strongly fixed on God, and adoring in all things his ever-holy will. He received all afflictions chearfully, knowing them to be the greatest remedy and advancement in the interior man, if the exterior be humbled and beaten by many strokes. The author of the life of St Anselm of Lucca assures us, that his heart seemed perfectly disengaged from all earthly things, and that he attained to so eminent a gift of contemplation, that, in the midst of the most distracting affairs, he appeared always recollected, and often fell into raptures. Duke Robert having rescued him from his enemies, conducted him, for greater safety, from Rome to Monte Cassino, and thence to Salerno, where God was pleased to put an end to his labours. For the saint falling sick in that city, he recommended for his successor cardinal Desiderius, abbot of Monte Cassino; and, having received the last sacraments, in perfect dispositions of resignation and piety, happily exchanged this mortal life for immortality, on the 25th of May, 1085, in the twelfth year of his pontificate. Several cotemporary writers bear testimony to many miracles performed by him, or through his intercession, after his death. (c) See St Gregory's epistles

(c) An Account of several miracles of this saint, is given by Lambert of Aschaffnaburg, a monk of Hirschfeld, whom the great Scaliger prefers to all the other German historians, both for diligence and exactness, and for the elegance and purity of his style, and who wrote his history the same year in which this holy pope died. (Lambert ad an. 1077.) Mention is also made of his miracles by Ordericus Vitalis, an Englishman, though a monk in Normandy, who wrote his ecclesiastical history in thirteen books, soon after the death of this pope. Likewise by Paulus Bernriedensis, &c.

Baron Holberg, in his late abridged Universal History, (a work, notwithstanding the praises which some have very unjustly bestowed on it, equally superficial, and full of rancour, slanders, and mistakes) most falsely advances that, during this contest about investitures, Gregory VII. exposed ecclesiastical benefices, and every thing that is sacred, to sale, no less than the emperors did. Whereas it is most notorious,

and his exact life in the Bolland. T. 17. p. 113. and Mabillon, sec. 6. Ben. Also Lambert of Aschafenburg, William of Malmesbury, Platina, Bzovius, &c. See Janning the Bollandist, Junii T. 6. p. 167. Papebroke, T. 6. Maij. p. 70. and Benedict XIV's Apology for St Gregory VII. l. 1. de canoniz. Sanctor. c. 41. T. 1. Nat. Alex. sæc. xi. art. 11. & dissert. 2. art. 6. 7. Muratori, Annali d'Italia, T. 12 and 13. The life of St Gregory VII. by Pandulphus of Pisa, in Muratori, Scriptor. Ital. T. 3. p. 304: also by Paulus Bernriedensis of the same age, with the remarks of Muratori, ib. p. 314.

It may not be amiss to add what Du Pin, a most partial adversary, writes concerning him, when he notorious, from the councils, epistles, and whole conduct of this pope, that the vice of simony never had a more zealous or a more implacable enemy.

When avarice and incontinence threatened to invade even the altars, he stood in the breach, and by his vigilance and fortitude maintained their sanctity, dying with these words in his mouth: I have loved justice, and have hated iniquity, therefore I die in a strange land. As to the unhappy emperor Henry IV. that prince during his minority, especially after the removal of his mother, fell into the hands of ambitious men, who found it their interest to flatter and indulge him in his passions. By which means he first by his tyranny provoked his subjects to revolt, and afterwards, by oppressing the church, endeavouring to fill it with simoniacal and unworthy pastors, and raising a most outrageous schism, rendered himself most notoriously obnoxious to the severest ecclesiastical censures.

The works of St Gregory VII. consist of ten books of epistles, (extant T. 10. Conc.) with two appendixes, published by Dom Martenne, (Collect. Nova Veter. Scriptor. T. 1 p. 57.) The Exposition of the seven penitential Psalms, which has been sometimes ascribed to St Gregory the Great, is more absurdly given by Du Pin and some others to Gregory VII. For this work is quoted by Paterius the disciple of St Gregory the Great, by Nicholas I. &c. None of his sermons have reached us, though it was in them that he chiefly exerted his zeal and eloquence. The emperor Henry III., and the greatest prelates and preachers of that age, admired his talent that way; and were in raptures as often as they heard him preach. The slanders which Spanheim, Turretin and others have collected from Benno the schismatic; and other writers of the same cast, are confuted by their inconsistency, and by the writings of St Gregory, &c. Moreover the charge is overset by its own weight, and by Benno's forgeries, concerning the pretended magic of the learned pope Sylvester II. and others.

draws his character: "It must be acknowledged, (says he) that pope Gregory VII. was an extraordinary genius, capable of great things; constant and undaunted in the execution; well versed in the constitution of his predecessors; zealous for the interests of the Holy See; an enemy to simony and libertinism (vices which he vigorously opposed); full of Christian thoughts, and of zeal for the reformation of the manners of the clergy; and there is not the least colour to think that he was not unblemished in his own morals. . . . This is the judgment which we suppose every one will pass upon him, who shall read over his letters with a disinterested and unprejudiced mind. They are penned with a great deal of eloquence, full of good matter, and embellished with noble and pious thoughts: and we boldly say, that no pope, since Gregory I. wrote such strong and fine letters as this Gregory did." Du Pin, Cent. 11. ch. i. p. 67, 68.

SS. MAXIMUS, vulgarly MAUXE, and VENERAND, Martyrs, in Normandy. According to the modern legend, these saints were brothers, natives of Brescia, in Italy. The former is said to have been ordained bishop, and the latter deacon, by pope Damasus, and sent by him to preach the faith to the infidels. They first executed their commission in the armies of the barbarians which had crossed the Alps from Germany into Lombardy, but seem to have reaped no other fruit of their labours, but the honour of suffering torments for the name of Christ. Having escaped out of the hands of their persecutors, they travelled into France, accompanied by two holy priests, named Mark and Etheirus. They passed through the cities of Auxerre, Sens, and Paris, and having made an halt at the confluence of the Oise and the Seine, pursued their journey toward Evreux. At Acquiney, a village four leagues from that city, and one from Louviers, they were seized by a troop of barbarous infidels (or, according to others, of Arian heretics) who carried them into a fruitful island formed in that village by the rivers Eure and Itton, and there beheaded them. Mark and Etherius escaped out of the hands of these barbarians who were conducting them to Evreux, and returning, buried the bodies of the two martyrs in an old church beyond the island, which had been plundered by the Vandals, and left almost in ruins. (a) St Eternus was at that time bishop of Evreux, who, according to all, sat a very short time, and is honoured as a martyr at Evreux, on the 16th of July, and at Luzarche, a town in the diocese of Paris, toward Chantilly, where his relicks are kept in a silver shrine, on the 1st of September, and their translation on the 13th of August. He is sometimes called Etherius; whence some think him to have been the companion of our holy martyrs from Italy, who was chosen bishop after their death. He is usually placed about the year 512, after Maurusio, the immediate successor of St Gaud. Some critics place the mission and martyrdom of our saints, and of St Eternus or Etherius, soon after the death of St Taurinus, the founder of the see of Evreux, before St Gaud, and before many of the people were converted to the faith, which both the end of their mission and their martyrdom render probable: nor have we any authentic monuments which ascertain the time, either of their death, or of the episcopacy of St Eternus.

When Richard I., surnamed the Old, was duke of Normandy, and Guiscard bishop of Evreux, about the year 960, the relicks of SS. Maximus and Venerand were discovered at Acquiney by one Amalbert, who attempted to carry off this sacred treasure except the heads of the two martyrs, which he left with the old inscription engraved on a marble stone: Hic sita sunt Corpora SS. Maximi et Venerandi. As he was crossing the Seine, near the monastery of Fontenelle or St Vandrille, with the rest of the sacred bones, he was seized with a miraculous sickness, and obliged to deposit them in that famous abbey: and Richard, duke of Normandy, built a new chapel there for their reception. (1) These relicks were burnt by the Huguenots. Those which remained at Acquiney were kept in a church built over their tomb, which was made a Benedictin priory dependent of the abbey of Conches; but this church falling to decay, by an order of M. de Rochecouard, bishop of Evreux, these relicks were translated into the parish church, and deposited under the high altar. On their festival, on the 25th of May, these relicks are carried in procession to the place where the saints received the crown of martyrdom. In the spring of the year 1559, in a great drought, they were carried, in a solemn procession, to the church of our Lady at Evreux: and again, in June 1615, when at Evreux, these were carried after the head of St Swithin; also in 1726: and each time the procession was followed with abundant rains. SS. Maximus and Venerand are honoured with great devotion in the diocese of Evreux, and at the abbey of St Vandrille. See their history, printed at Evreux in 1752, also Le Bras-seur, Hist. d'Evreux, p. 33. & 77. and Trigan, Hist. Ecclesiastique de la Normandie, An. 1759. T. I. p. 79.

(a) The Vandals made their great irruption into Gaul about the beginning of the reign of Valentinian the Younger. Idacius in Chron. Procopius de Bello Vandal. S. Hieron. ep. 91. T. 4. ed Ben. part 2.

St DUMHADE, an Irish or Scottish monk, who, being made abbot of Hij, or St Columkille's great monastery, introduced the Roman manner of celebrating Easter. After governing that abbey ten years, he died in 717. He is titular saint of the church of Killclocair, in the diocese of Armagh. See Colgan in MSS. ad 25 Maij.

(1) Chron. Fontenel. apud D'Achery in Spicileg. T. 3. p. 256.

MAY XXVI.

ST PHILIP NERI, C.

From his life written in 1601. by F. Antony Galloni, one of the most intimate and learned of his disciples, five years after his death : and again by James Baccius, printed at Rome in 1645. See his new life collected from several other authentic memoirs, printed at Venice, in 1727. See also certain corrections of this saint's history, published at Florence in 1761, by Dominic Maria Manni, member of the Academy of Apatists, and Papebroke, T. 6. Maij. p. 461.

A. D. 1595.

PERFECT charity, which distinguishes all the saints, rendered this great servant of God a bright star in the church in these latter ages. He was born at Florence in 1515, and was son of Francis Neri, a lawyer, and Lucretia Soldi, both descended of wealthy Tuscan families. From five years of age he was never known in the least tittle wilfully to transgress the will of his parents. Once indeed, a sister disturbing him on purpose whilst he was reciting the psalter with another sister, he gently pushed her away ; for which action his father chid him : and this he bewailed with many tears as a great fault. He was very patient in sickness, and so mild that he seemed not to know what anger was. When he was only eleven years old he visited the churches very much, and prayed and heard the word of God with singular devotion. Such was his piety, his reverence and respect to superiors, and his humility, sweetness and affability to all, that he was exceedingly beloved, and was commonly called good Philip. Having finished his grammar studies when he was eighteen years of age, he was sent by his father to an uncle (who lived near Mount Cassino, and was very rich by traffic), not to learn his business, but to be his heir. But Philip, feeling in his soul ardent desires perfectly to follow Jesus Christ, and fearing the dangers of dissipation and of entangling his soul in the world, soon left his uncle, and went to Rome in 1533. There being taken into the house of Galleotto Caccia, a Florentine nobleman, in quality of preceptor to his children, he led so edifying a life, that the reputation of his sanctity was spread very wide, and reached Florence. Ordinarily he eat only once a day, and he could hardly be brought to add to bread and water a few olives, and a small quantity of herbs. He spent much time retired in a little chamber, passing sometimes whole nights in prayer; in which exercise he was favoured with abundant spiritual delights. His pupils made an admirable progress under his care, both in virtue and learning; and in the mean time he studied philosophy and divinity in such a manner as to distinguish himself in the schools. Every body sought his acquaintance, but in this particular he was very cautious and reserved, for fear of falling into bad company, or at least of losing any part of his precious time. It is the observation of a modern philosopher, that one quarter of an hour a day, given to superfluous or unprofitable conversation, amounts to a very considerable part of the longest life, in which the necessities of age and nature make always large abatements, and reduce action to a short span, in which we are to lay in provisions for eternity. This reflection made the saint extremely solicitous to husband well all his moments. Philip gave to his neighbour only that time which duty, mutual edification and charity required.

Z 3

He was moreover sensible that even saints complain that they return from company less fit for prayer, and seldom without some wounds in their soul: and that the idle conversation of the world always blows upon our hearts that contagious air of vanity, pride and love of pleasure, which it breathes; and which is always so much the more dangerous, as its poison is the more secret. Notwithstanding his precautions, the devil found means to play upon him his wicked agents. Certain lewd young men made an assault upon his chastity by impudent discourse: but he spoke to them with so much piety and strength, that he softened their hardened hearts into compunction, and converted them to God. Against temptations he armed himself by prayer, fasting and humility : yet he sometimes felt assaults or buffets of the flesh till fifty years of age : but for the thirty last years of his life, was as free from all rebellion of that domestic enemy, as if he had been without a body, as he declared to cardinal Baronius ; pouring forth at the same time a torrent of tears for his sloth and ingratitude in making no return to God, as he said, for the grace by which he had always preserved his virginity spotless in mind and body. He practised an universal mortification of his senses, often even in the smallest things ; saying, that frequent self-denial in little things is necessary for us, that we may conquer in greater conflicts. To such a degree did he carry his love of holy poverty, that when he came first to Rome, he would accept of nothing from his fond father but two or three shirts : and he kept nothing in his little room but a poor bed, a few books, and a little linen, which hung upon a cord against the wall. To all kinds of pastime he was an utter stranger, contriving to find necessary relaxation and exercise in works of charity or devotion, as in going from one church to another, and visiting hospitals. Even during the course of his studies, he gave a great deal of his time to prayer, and every day visited all, or, at least, some of the seven churches appointed to be visited by pilgrims, which are several miles asunder, and some of them without the city. (a) He often spent the whole night in prayer before the door of some private church, and especially over the relicks of the martyrs in the cemetery of Calixtus : often, when overpowered by sleep, he took a little rest on the ground, in a porch of one of the seven churches. Whilst he was yet a young student in philosophy, he never called to mind the sufferings of Christ, or reflected on the sins and ingratitude of men, or cast his eyes upon a crucifix, without melting into tears. After he completed the course of his theology, he took some time for the study of the holy scriptures, and of the fathers, the two sources and eyes of that science. The canons and laws of the church, containing the precepts and admonitions of her pastors and councils, are a necessary and excellent rule for the direction of manners among Christians: and a skill in some parts of the canon law is very requisite in a pastor of souls. St Philip therefore made the study of the canon law a part of his care; and became in a short time an oracle in all sacred studies, to whom many learned professors resorted for advice in their difficulties. The saint always recommended and promoted exceedingly these studies among his disciples; and, to encourage them, he afterwards commanded his pious and learned scholar, Cæsar Baronius, (b) who had entered the Oratory of St Philip at eighteen years of age, to compile his annals of the church; in the beginning of which work he was to him a great assistance, and a daily spur, as Baronius acknowledges, (1) who calls him the first author and original contriver of his annals.

(a) These seven churches are the Vatican and Lateran Basilics, St Mary Major, and that of the Holy Cross of Jerusalem, situate on the different sides of the city : St Laurence's extra muros, two miles out of the city on the Tiburtin road, St Paul's on the Ostian road, five miles from the old Forum, now called Campo Vaccino, and St Sebastian's on the Appian road. These churches are all enriched with relicks of the most celebrated martyrs, &c.

St Philip was one of the best scholars of the age: but being desirous to approach nearer and nearer to Jesus Christ, whose sweet attractions he continually felt in his soul, at twenty-three years of age he sold even his books for the relief of the poor. Often in prayer he was so overwhelmed with spiritual joy and sweetness, as not to be able to stand. Sometimes he was heard, as he lay prostrate on the ground, to cry out: "Enough, O Lord, enough: withhold a little at present, I beseech you, the torrent of your sweet-

(1) Annal. T. 8. pref.

(b) Baronius was afterwards created cardinal, in 1596, by Clement VIII. and died in 1607. Notwithstanding some mistakes in history, unavoidable in first essays of that nature, all must applaud his undertaking, and admire both the work, and the great erudition, and immense application and labour of this parent of the annals of church history.

ness" And another time: "Depart from me, O Lord; depart from me. I am yet a mortal man, and am not able to bear such an abundance of celestial joy. Behold I die, my dear Lord, unless you succour me." He used often to say: "O God, seeing you are so infinitely amiable, why have you given us but one heart to love you. and this so little and so narrow?" It is believed, that if God had not, on such occasions, abated or withdrawn his consolations, he must have died through excess of joy, as he himself averred. Humility made him most industrious to conceal his knowledge or science, and much more the extraordinary gifts of grace: for he in all things sought his own contempt. Had not his heart been perfectly empty of itself, the divine love could never have found room in it, to overflow in such abundance. So impetuous and so sensible was this love in his breast, that it frequently discovered itself in a wonderful manner in his countenance, and in the violent palpitation of his heart. For, as St Francis of Sales shews, in his book of the Love of God, and as experience convinces, violent affections of the mind produce strange effects upon the body. (c) Galloni testifies, that the divine love so much dilated the breast of our saint in an extraordinary rapture, that the gristle which joined the fourth and fifth ribs on the left side, was broken: which accident allowed the heart and the larger vessels more play: in which condition he lived fifty years. In the midst of a great city, he led for some years almost the life of a hermit. For a long time he eat only bread, with a few olives, herbs, or an apple,

(c) These effects, the natural oeconomy of the human body explains, though the cause be obscure, depending on the unknown laws of the union of the soul and body. As anger, and, much more hatred and grief, contract the human vessels, make the motion of the fluids languid and sluggish, and create obstructions in the glands, which are the seeds of various distempers; so joyful hope (the most healthful temper of mind) joy and divine love, which is always regular, dilate the heart and vessels, accelerate the motion of the fluids, increase the spirits, and exceedingly promote a good habit of body, which envy, jealousy, inordinate fear, and the like affections, very much disturb. See Cheyne, Boerhave, Heister.

drank only water, and lay on the bare floor. His earnest desire of loving God more perfectly, by being united to him in glory, made him languish continually after that blessed hour when his soul should be freed from the prison of his body, and, taking her flight to its origin and centre, should drown itself in the ocean of all good. He was wont to say, that to one that truly loveth God, nothing can happen more grievous than delays of his enjoyment, and than life itself. But then the will of God, and the love of penance and suffering, made this delay itself a subject of comfort: in which he also rejoiced with St Paul (2), inasmuch as by living on earth he was able still to labour in bringing souls to God.

His insatiable zeal for the salvation of others, drew him often to the exchange, and other public places in the city, to seek opportunities of gaining some soul to God, or at least, of preventing some sin: in which he did wonders, and, whilst yet a layman, quite changed the face of several public places. He often visited the hospitals, there to comfort, exhort, and serve the sick. He lamented to see the custom of waiting on poor sick persons disused in the world; a practice extremely conducive to inspire sentiments of humility and charity. He therefore desired very much to revive it, and, with that view, commenced the confraternity of the Blessed Trinity in Rome, with the assistance of his confessarius, who was a very holy priest, named Persiano Rosa. He laid the first foundation of this pious establishment, with fourteen companions, in 1548, in the church of our Saviour Del-Campo. He settled the most admirable œconomy and good order for receiving, serving, and instructing the sick and pilgrims. In this place St Philip made pious discourses, and held conferences several times every day, and often till late at night, by which he reclaimed great numbers from vice, and conducted many to an eminent perfection. In the year of the jubilee 1550, he translated this confraternity to the church of the Holy Trinity, and erected a new hospital, under the name of the Blessed Trinity, which to this day subsists in the most flourishing condition, and is one of the best regulated hospitals in the world. Several cardinals and princes come thither out of devotion in the evenings, to wash the feet, and to serve with their own hands the pilgrims, and especially the sick. Sometimes 600 waiters on an evening are assembled together to this act of humility. The ladies wait on the female patients in another hospital. St Philip, not content with the care of hospitals, laid himself out in relieving the distressed in all parts of the city. It happened that as he was carrying an alms in a stormy night for secrecy, he fell into a deep ditch: but was preserved by God from receiving any hurt.

(2) Phil. ii, 24.

Humility made the saint sometimes think of devoting himself to the service of God in a laical state. But being desirous to employ his labours in the best manner he could in the care of souls, he deliberated with himself what state to choose for this end. On this occasion he was not only persuaded, but most urgently pressed and compelled by his confessor Rosa, to enter into holy orders. After a long preparation, he was ordained priest in June 1551, being thirty-six years old almost complete. From which time he chose his dwelling in a small community, at the church of St Jerom, where Rosa and certain other very virtuous priests lived. Every one eat by himself, and fasted according to his strength and devotion. Here Philip mitigated the austerities of his former life, and allowed himself a slender breakfast in the morning; and for his supper a couple of eggs, or a mess of broth, or a few herbs or beans: he seldom eat any flesh, and rarely fish. But when he eat abroad, which was very seldom, he took what was set before him, to avoid singularity: but never touched more than one thing: and seemed to eat without any relish for his food. He lived in a little unfurnished room, attending only to his devotions, and to the winning of souls to God. In saying his first mass, he was so overpowered with spiritual consolations, that, on account of the shaking of his hands and whole body, he was scarce able to pour the wine and water into the chalice: and this continued during the rest of the sacrifice, especially at the elevation and communion, and he was often obliged to lean on the altar, being otherwise in danger of falling down. He said mass every day, unless hindered by some grievous sickness: and then he always received the holy communion. He often fell into raptures at the altar, particularly after communicating: also after mass. On this account, he was sometimes two hours in saying mass: for which reason, towards the end of his life, he performed that function privately in a domestic chapel. The delight he found in receiving the holy sacrament is inexpressible. The very remembrance of that divine banquet, when he took an empty chalice into his hand, made him melt in tender sentiments of love. Galloni mentions several extraordinary raptures with which the saint was favoured in prayer, and testifies that his body was sometimes seen raised from the ground, during his devotions, some yards high, (3) at which time his countenance appeared shining with a bright light. (d)

(3) Galloni vit. c. 20.

(d) We find the same authentically attested of many other servants of God. St Ignatius of Loyola was sometimes seen raised in prayer two feet above the ground, his body at the same time shining with light. The like elevations are related in the lives of St Dominick, St Dunstan, St Philip Beniti, St Cajetan, St Albert of Sicily, B. Bernard Ptolemæi institutor of the Congregation of our Lady of Mount Olivet, Aug. xxi. B. Robert of Palentin, Aug xviii. &c. in the Bollandists, of St Francis of Assisium in his life by Chalippe, and others. Many of the authors of these lives, persons of undoubted veracity, testify that they were themselves eye-witnesses of this fact; others were so careful and diligent writers, that their authority cannot be questioned. Thus Trivet tells us, that St Richard, then chancellor to St Edmund, archbishop of Canterbury, one day opening softly the chapel door, saw his archbishop raised high in the air, with his knees bent, and his arms stretched out: but, falling gently to the ground, and seeing his chancellor, he complained to him that he had hindered him of great spiritual delights and comfort. Trivet, Annal. p. 73. ad ann. 1240. Dom Calmet, an author still living, and a severe and learned critic, assures us, that he knows a religious man who, in devout prayer, is sometimes involuntarily raised in the air, and remains hanging in it without any support. Also that he is personally acquainted with a devout man, to whom the same had often happened. Calmet diss. sur les Apparitions, chap. 21. See in the life of saint Teresa written by herself, how, notwithstanding her resistance, her body sometimes was raised from the ground. Whether these persons, and others to whom the like may have happened, were raised by the invisible ministry of angels, or by any supernatural operation immediately derived from God, is uncertain, and probably what they themselves could not determine; any more than St Paul could perceive whether he was carried up into heaven in his body or out of his body.

St Philip was not less eminent in zeal for the divine honour, and in charity for men, than in the gifts of contemplation. Soon after he had received the priest-

It is objected to these miracles, that Eunapius, a Platonic philosopher, who in 380 wrote the lives of Porphyrius and Jamblichus, relates that the latter was often raised ten cubits into the air, and was seen surrounded with a bright light. But this historian in credulity and malice against the Christians surpassed Porphyrius and Jamblichus themselves, and his testimony in relating such idle dreams can have no weight with any serious reader. By the pretended rapture of Jamblichus, it was his aim to forge a prodigy which might seem to rival the transfiguration of Christ, and probably the favours granted to several saints, like this related of St Philip. We must observe that those heathen Platonic philosophers, who, in the first age of the gospel, laid claim to Theurgy or a magic power, never attempted to perform any miracle in a public authentic manner: their historians were remote in time, produce no sufficient vouchers in confirmation of the prodigies they relate, and overset themselves by the ridiculous absurdity of their histories, and their inconsistencies both with themselves and with the most certain monuments of those ages. It was only with a view to discredit the incontestable miracles which proved our holy religion to be the work of God, that they had recourse to imposture, and to the illusions of magic. For this Porphyrius of Tyre, in 270, laid down pretended rules of divination: and his scholar Jamblichus above mentioned, in Syria, under Constantine the Great, published a book of Mysteries, which is only a heap of enthusiasm and abominable folly, concerning the miraculous effects of the Theurgy, and the purification of the soul, till by a transformation it is united to the celestial powers. And both these impostors seriously relate of Pythagoras, that he was saluted by rivers, and that he could remember all the several bodies his soul had animated, and how he had been a tree, a girl, a fish, and that very Euphorbus the Trojan, who was slain by Menelaus; with many other tales still more ridiculous, unknown to Diogenes Laërtius, or any former writer during above 800 years from the death of Pythagoras. Philostratus, under the emperor Severus in 206, another of the same class, wrote the life of Apollonius Tyanæus, above 100 years after his death, containing an account of his pretended prodigies.

But

hood, he was ordered by his superiors, and confessarius, to hear confessions, for which function he was by a long preparation excellently qualified. And so great

But the view of all these writers was only to oppose such forgeries to the true and evident miracles of Christ and his followers, the reality of which they were not able to contest. And such are the inconsistency and absurdity of their vague idle stories, that to rank them with the fables of Ovid's Metamorphosis would be doing them too much honour. How unjust is it to put the most authentic Christian miracles upon a level with such ridiculous forgeries? These their pretensions, far from weakening, serve to corroborate the evidence for the Christian miracles, inasmuch as by them it appears to what wretched shifts the most ingenious, the most implacable, and most learned adversaries of our religion were driven. Certainly the reality and evidence of our miracles left no room for cavil, seeing philosophers of the greatest penetration, abilities and power, could find no other expedient to gratify their inveterate malice against us, than by pretending to rival our miracles by the grossest forgeries. It is, however, no way unreasonable to allow that Appollonius Tyanæus and some others might, by the divine permission, effect certain wonderful things, as Tillemont and Fleury seem not unwilling to grant; though the authority of the vouchers is by no means cogent. The empire of the devil, though much restrained from the time of the death of Christ to the coming of antichrist, which is implied by his being said to be bound, Rev. xx. 2. 3. is not so far abridged that he is not suffered, by special permissions of God, to use his natural power to tempt men to sin; and also sometimes, though very rarely, to endeavour to seduce them by lying signs, in which he would fain mimic the finger of God. But on these occasions, he always bears the visible marks of his imposture, by which his works may be distinguished from those of God. Among these, a secret spirit of pride is always a certain proof of his artifice. Hence those who lay down rules for the discernment of spirits, unanimously teach, that in visions, raptures or extraordinary favours, every thing is to be ascribed to the illusion of the devil or the force of imagination, if the person coveted, or was fond of such extraordinary favours, which is always a grievous presumption and dangerous snare: likewise, if under them he seemed puffed up, if he divulged them, or willingly spoke of them, except for private advice or necessity. For the Holy Ghost, especially in such favours, always inspires by his gifts, and requires the most profound humility, love of the closest secrecy, and perfect obedience to the advice of spiritual superiors, even against a person's own judgment. Such favours, if doubtful as to their origin, must always be disregarded. Persons must also be convinced that sanctity no way consists in them; must set no high value on them, and labour only to advance by every means in sincere humility, meekness and charity: rejoicing not in them, but in the divine grace and mercy, Luke x. 20. This St Philip perfectly understood, and was endowed with a singular gift of discerning spirits. He was his desire of gaining souls to God, that he was never weary of this employment ; though, beginning early in the morning, he often spent in it almost the whole day. Even after mass, when called to this duty, he contented himself with a short thanksgiving, and went immediately to attend this office of charity, preferring the comfort of others to his own most favourite time of devotion. Nor is it credible how many souls he drew out of the mire of sin, and moved to embrace a life of singular perfection. Charity taught him innumerable devices to win the most hardened. The sight of a Jew, who happened one day to speak to him, pierced him with so deep a sentiment of compassion for his soul, that for three whole weeks he never ceased weeping and praying for him till he saw him baptized. By displaying the terrors of death and the divine judgments, he softened the most obdurate sinners, if they once listened to him. Those who shunned him, for fear of the remedy of their spiritual diseases, he often gained, by addressing himself to God in their behalf in fervent prayers. One he converted, by desiring him to say seven times every day the Salve Regina, kissing the ground in the end, and adding these words: To-morrow I may be among the dead. Those that were engaged in criminal habits, he cured by enjoining them every evening, with some prayer, a short reflection on death ; or a short representation to themselves of a soul in hell, and an imaginary entertainment or dialogue with her on her state, on eternity, the emptiness and extravagance of sin, and the like : or such a representation of a person dying, or of a carcass laid in the grave. He had an excellent talent for exciting penitents to compunction, and in inspiring them with a sovereign abhorrence of all sin : also in assisting them to discover the occasions and sources of sin, and to cut them off. In this con-sharply reprov'd those that seem'd to be delighted with visions, and was wont to exhort such persons to contemn them as dangerous snares, affirming, " That nothing is more pernicious than such mad mockeries of the devils, who easily transform themselves into angels of light." He inculcated, " That persons ought to be only solicitous to correct their manners, and subdue their passions."

sharply

sists very much the fruit of repentance : the occasions and approaches of the evil must be retrenched ; the cancer must be entirely extirpated with every string of its root : the least fibre left behind will push forth again, and with more vigour than before. Here the penitent must not spare himself, whatever it costs him : though he part with an eye or a foot. It is by the neglect of this precaution, that so many conversions are false and counterfeit ; and that relapses are so frequent. Our skilful director was careful to lay the axe to the root ; and, not content to draw souls out of Sodom, he obliged them to quit the neighbourhood, and fly to the mountains, to the greatest distance from the danger. With this precaution, the other remedies, which he applied, all produced their desired effect. The saint, by the lights which the purity of his affections, and his spirit of prayer, were the means of obtaining, and by his learning and singular experience in the paths of virtue, conducted fervent souls in the maxims of heroic perfection. He sometimes miraculously penetrated the secrets of the hearts of others ; and in particular knew hidden sins of impurity by the stench which such sinners exhaled, as several testified after his death. To one he said, that “ he perceived such a horrid stench to come from the person infected with this filthy vice, that he never found any thing so noisome.” To some, who had criminally concealed such sins in confession, he said : “ To me you cast forth an ill savour : you are fallen into such a sin of impurity : cast out the poison by confession.” His thirst for the salvation of souls made him earnestly desire to go to the Indies : but he was dissuaded by those whom he consulted, who told him that Rome was his Indies ; a large field for all his zeal and labour, which would furnish him with an ample harvest.

The saint received all that resorted to him in his chamber, and was wont to instruct them by daily conferences, with incredible unction and fruit. Evil eyes could not bear so great a light ; and certain envious and malicious persons derided his devotion at mass, and his other actions, and, by the most contumelious discourse, and outrageous slanders, insulted his person, and blackened his reputation. All which he bore with meekness and silence, never once opening his mouth in his own defence, or complaining of any one, but rejoicing to see himself meet with scorn and contempt. Often when he was reviled, he exulted with joy. One of these slanderers was so moved by seeing the cheerfulness of the saint's countenance, and his invincible patience, whilst another cursed and reproached him in the most bitter terms, that he was converted upon the spot, undertook the defence of the servant of God, and entered upon a penitential and edifying course of life. The author of all these injuries and affronts, moved also at the saint's patience and mildness, of his own accord came to him, and, upon his knees, begged his pardon, which St Philip willingly granted him; and most kindly embracing him, received him into the number of his children. The man of God said, that if we ask of God patience and humility, we ought to rejoice and thank him when he sendeth us occasions of exercising those virtues, which are not to be obtained but by crosses, and frequent acts of them. Another time, when he had opened his Oratory, certain persons accused him of pride and ambition, and that he loved and affected to be followed by the people. Upon which complaints, the vicar of Rome gave him a sharp reprimand, forbade him to hear confessions for fifteen days, and to preach without a new licence: he moreover threatened him with imprisonment, if he did not leave his new ways of proceeding. The saint modestly answered, that he was most ready to obey his superiors in whatever they should command him. He excused the authors of his troubles in the best manner he was able, and with cheerfulness said to his friends, that God had permitted him to be so treated, that he might become humble. By his patience and modesty, this storm blew over, and, after an enquiry into his conduct, leave was given him to live after his wonted manner, and to draw sinners to God by such means as his prudence should suggest. After which, his chamber began to be frequented by many of the prime nobility, to the singular profit of their souls. His charity for all seemed to have no bounds: but when he did but look on notorious wicked men, he could hardly contain the abundance of tears, which compassion moved him to shed.

Désiring, by all means in his power, to help his neighbour, he, by his conferences, laid the foundation of the Congregation of Oratorians in 1551. Several priests and young ecclesiastics associating themselves with him, began to assist him in his conferences, and in reading prayers and meditations to the people, in the church of the Holy Trinity. They were called Oratorians, because at certain hours every morning and afternoon, by ringing a bell they called the people to the church to prayers and meditations. In 1564, when the saint had formed his Congregation into a regular community, he preferred several of his young ecclesiastics to holy orders; one of whom was the famous Cæsar Baronius, whom, for his eminent sanctity, Benedict XIV., by a decree, dated on the 12th of January 1745, honoured with the title of Venerable Servant of God. At the same time, he formed his disciples into a community, using one common purse and table, and he gave them rules and statutes. He forbade any of them to bind themselves to this state by vow or oath, that all might live together joined only by the bands of fervour and holy charity; labouring with all their strength to establish the kingdom of Christ in themselves by the most perfect sanctification of their own souls, and to propagate the same in the souls of others, by preaching, instructing the ignorant, and teaching the Christian doctrine. The general he appointed to be triennial: but was himself, much against his will, chosen general for life, though he afterward found means to obtain a release from that burden, by alleging his age and infirmities. This happened in 1595, when Baronius was chosen his successor, though that great man left nothing unattempted to remove the burden from his shoulders. (10)

(10) See the life of Card. Baronius published with his letters, and censure of Molina, by Raymundus Albericius, in 2 vols. 4to. at Rome 1759.

St PHILIP, who dated the foundation of his Oratory in 1564, obtained of pope Gregory XIII. the approbation of his Congregation in 1575. Its constitutions were afterward confirmed by Paul V. in 1612. The same Gregory XIII. bestowed on the saint the church of our Lady of Vallicella, which was new built in a finished taste by exquisite architects, whence it is called the New Church. St Philip took possession of it in 1583: but his Congregation still continues to serve also the hospital of pilgrims of the Holy Trinity. The saint lived to see many houses of his Oratory erected at Florence, Naples, San Severino, Anxur, Lucca, Firmo, Panormo, Fano, Padua, Vicenza, Ferrara, Thonon, &c. (e) He established among his followers the rule

(e) The Oratorians in Italy are called Philippini, and are not religious men, but secular priests living in communities. This congregation flourishes in that country with learned and eminent men, from whose zealous labours in teaching youth, and in all the functions of the ministry, the public reaps much advantage.

The French Oratory is an institute formed upon the plan of the Italian Oratory, but differing in several material points: The founder was the learned and pious cardinal Peter de Berulle. That great man was descended of a noble family of Champagne. His father Claude was a counsellor or judge in the parliament of Paris, and his mother Louisa Seguiet was by her exemplary piety an additional ornament to the long line of great statesmen and prelates, which in her family had for many ages served their country. After the decease of her virtuous consort she became a Carmelite nun, in which austere order she died in the arms of her pious son, in the 78th year of her age. Peter, when only eighteen years old, wrote an excellent book, On self-denial. He at first turned his thoughts towards a religious life; but being desirous to serve his neighbour, at last entered among the secular clergy, and after a retreat of forty days spent in assiduous prayer and great austerities, in a convent of Capuchins, received holy orders in 1599. In saying his first mass, he fell into raptures in the presence of many persons. From his infancy he was a fervent lover of humility, mortification, retirement and prayer: and his whole life was a perfect model of these virtues. Though he was a most learned divine, yet out of humility he would never take the degree of doctor. He refused the bishoprics of Laon and Nantes, and the abbacy of St Stephen of Caen; also the honour of being preceptor to the dauphin of France, though he was very much pressed to take upon him that charge. The king once finding all his endeavours in vain to oblige him to accept of a bishopric, said with warmth, he would take care that he should be compelled to consent, of obedience, and a total abnegation of their own will, saying, "This is the shortest and most assured way to attain to perfection." He was so great a lover of po-

by one who was greater than himself, meaning the pope. Berulle resolutely answered, that if he was pressed any more upon that head, he would leave his majesty's dominions. He converted the count of Laval, and many other Calvinists, and employed himself with great zeal in the direction of souls. He settled in France the Teresian or Carmelite nuns, whom he brought from Spain in 1603, and was himself many years the confessarius of those chaste spouses of Christ in their nunnery, which, for his sake, the queen-mother, Mary Medicis, built for their use in Paris.

This great servant of God formed certain priests in the perfect spirit of their holy state, and, by the strong persuasions of St Francis of Sales, venerable Cæsar de Bus, and F. Coton, and by the repeated commands of his bishop, cardinal de Retz, founded the French Oratory in 1611. He worked with his own hands in building their first chapel, and carried himself hods of mortar: for he sought every opportunity of humiliation. The French Oratorians are a congregation of priests who live in voluntary poverty, obedience, and the laborious functions of their state, according to the spirit of Jesus Christ. They are not religious men, but can of their own accord leave the Congregation; which was confirmed by Paul V. in 1613. The holy founder, notwithstanding his reluctancy, was often employed in public affairs. When the marriage of the princess Henrietta Maria, daughter of Henry IV. of France, with Charles I. king of England, was concluded, the French king sent the Abbe Berulle to Rome to procure a dispensation on account of the difference of religion: on which occasion the then Pope Urban VIII, after conversing often with the holy man, said: "Mr Berulle is not a man, but an angel." And he gave orders to his nuncios in France to follow in all things his advice, and to do nothing without it. He sent a cardinal's hat to meet him upon his return into France, with an express command to accept it. Berulle received the hat at Paris in 1627. King Lewis XIII. sent him into England to conduct thither his sister Henrietta Maria; and he there gained the esteem and veneration of the whole court, though his stay was very short. We are assured, says Perrault, that what chiefly determined Lewis XIII. and his council to undertake the siege of Rochelle, was a revelation which this cardinal had, that it would be successful. Berulle wrote many excellent works of piety, which were published in one volume folio by his learned and holy successor in the Oratory, F. Bourguion, who has prefixed to them his life. In his writings we admire his wonderful zeal and piety, his love of perfect self-denial and profound humility; and the most tender devotion to our divine Redeemer, and his sacred passion: also to the Blessed Virgin, and St Mary Magdalen. Notwithstanding his dignity of cardinal, and his great authority in the church and state, he never departed from his first plan of life, or from the simplicity, modesty, poverty and verty, that he earnestly desired always to live destitute of worldly goods, and in a suffering state of indigence. He strictly ordained that none of his Congregation and temperance of a true disciple of Jesus Christ. He said mass every day with the most tender and edifying devotion, and died of an apoplexy at the altar, just before the consecration, whilst he was offering to God the sacrifice of his heart, together with the immaculate victim he was going to consecrate. Whence the epigram:

*Cæpta sub extremis nequeo dum sacra sacerdos
Perficere; at saltem victima perficiam.*

See his life by Perrault, Hommes illustr; by Bourguoin, and by Habert de Cerisy. Cardinal Berulle died in 1629, 55 years old. He is buried in the stately church of Oratorians in the street of St Honoré in Paris; and in the rich and beautiful church of his dear Carmelite nuns, in the chapel of St Mary Magdalen, in which he was accustomed to pass many hours in prayer and heavenly contemplation, is placed a fine marble statue admirably finished, representing him on his knees at prayer before the altar. Over against this statue is the justly admired picture of St Mary Magdalen, the masterpiece of Le Brun, exhibiting the true portraiture of the famous dutchess de la Valiere, who made her religious profession in this austere house in 1675, and after a most penitential and holy life died 1710. Her spirit is expressed in her book entitled, Reflections on the Divine Mercy. In this chapel the cardinal kindled in his meditations the glowing sentiments of devotion to St Mary Magdalen, and of divine love, humility and compunction, which he expresses in his writings on her illustrious virtues.

Nothing is of greater importance in the church than that clergymen be formed in the perfect spirit of their holy state. And it must be acknowledged that it is not easy to imagine any thing better adapted to this purpose than the Original institute of the French Oratory. The example indeed of this spirit is of all means the most powerful to communicate it to others. This help none so perfectly possessed as those pastors who had the happiness of conversing with, and being formed by the apostles or the most eminently holy apostolic men among their disciples, the Ignatiuses, the Polycarps, the Simeons, &c. Yet the first Oratorians had an admirable example of this spirit before their eyes in their holy founder; and in all the constitutions and exercises of their institute the greatest external helps, especially in those of prayer and holy meditation, which are the soul of an interior life. These cardinal Berulle was chiefly solicitous to direct so as to instil the most perfect spirit of Christ or of his humility, meekness, patience, entire disengagement from the world or view to its interests (which is called the spirit of poverty), ardent zeal, and love both of God and our neighbour. This holy spirit was eminently inherited by F. Condren, the second, and by F. Bourguoin, third general of the French Oratory. The former, out of that profound humility for which he was most remarkable in all his actions, never would print any thing during should have to do with the purse of their penitents, saying, "It is impossible to gain both their souls and their goods." This holy man lived equally revered

his life, and refused with invincible resolution the dignity of cardinal, and the archbishoprics of Rheims and Lyons. Something indeed of his writings has been published since his death, which happened in 1641. From his edifying life wrote by F. Amelot, it appears how eminently he was replenished with the spirit of God and the science of the saints: with how tender a piety he was endowed, and with how extraordinary a talent in directing souls in the paths of Christian perfection. F. Bourguoin, who died in 1662, and left five volumes of very pious meditations on the life of Christ, &c. was not inferior to his predecessor in reputation for sanctity. The most tender devotion to our blessed Redeemer, and assiduous meditation on the mysteries of his Incarnation, were the characteristic virtue of these holy men and their colleagues. Among these John Baptist Gault being consecrated bishop of Marseilles, in a short time reformed that whole diocese, finished the hospital begun by M. de Gondy for the gally-slaves, spent much of his time in comforting and instructing them, and, by his astonishing meekness and patience, overcoming the obstinacy of the most hardened and most insolent, whom he would attend in their voyage or expedition at sea. He died on the 23d of May, 1643, in the odour of sanctity, and his tomb is visited in a chapel of the cathedral by great crowds of devout Christians, and the chapel filled with votive tokens for favours received of God. His life is written by several hands. F. Le Jeune, surnamed the Blind Father, because he lost his sight whilst he was preaching at Rouen, in the 35th year of his age, though he continued his missions and preaching to his death in 1672, the 86th year of his age, was not less illustrious by the sanctity of his life than by the wonderful success of his sermons. See the Discourse on his life by M. Ruben, in 8vo. also Lamy, 7me Entretien sur les Sciences. p. 224.

The happy influence of the zeal, holy example and perfect spirit of these pious clergymen, was not confined to their own congregation. M. Olier, who founded the seminary of S. Sulpice at Paris in 1642, entirely reformed that vast parish, and many other parts of France, and by his missionaries planted the faith at Montreal in America, was formed to perfect virtue, and directed in his pious establishments, by F. Condren. His life, wrote by F. Giry, presents us in a short portraiture the most accomplished model both of an ecclesiastical spirit, and of an interior life in all its states, whether of spiritual dryness and desolation, of contemplation, or of all the various functions of the ministry. His letters and other short tracts breathe the most cordial sentiments of charity and true piety.

F. Eudes, brother to Mezeray the French historian, was a perfect imitator of cardinal Berulle and F. Condren, and upon their spirit formed both his own in all maxims of true piety, and that of the Congregation of reformed secular clergy which he instituted at Caën in 1643, and which still subsists under the name of Eudistes, in Normandy, and beloved by the popes Pius IV. and V. Gregory XIII. and XIV. and Clement VIII. and by other great men, particularly by St Charles Borromeo. Among other mandy, Paris, Senlis, &c. They obey their superior without any vow, and are employed in the direction of several episcopal seminaries. The tender devotions and spirit of piety of cardinal Berulle. are pathetically expressed in F. Eudes' excellent book entitled, Le Royaume de Jesus Christ.

F Bernard, surnamed the Poor Priest, son to a counsellor of the parliament of Burgundy (afterward Lieutenant-general of Chalon upon the Saone) was much assisted after his conversion to God by the pious counsels of F. Condren. He was one of the most eminent contemplatives of his age, and the grand prior of Clugni gave public evidence that he saw this servant of God once in the chapel of the Jesuits college at Paris, raised above two feet from the ground for a considerable time together. So great was his love of abjection and the cross, that he thus addressed himself to our Redeemer: "The first of thy priests asked as a great favour that he might stay with you upon Mount Thabor: And I, who am the last of thy ministers, intreat thee to suffer me to remain at the foot of thy cross, suffering and dying if you please, provided I suffer and die by you." So perfect was his spirit and love of poverty, that cardinal Richelieu could not prevail upon him to accept of any benefice for himself or any other, or to ask of him any other favour than that some loose boards in the bottom of the cart on which he attended criminals to execution, might be mended, that they might pray without distractions from the fear of falling in the way. The fruit of his inflamed extemporary sermons several times in the week, was inexpressible. He died in 1641, was buried in the chapel of the hospital de la Charité, and the court and clergy of France have often solicited his beatification. See his life by M. Gauffre, F. Giry and F. Lemperèur, Jesuit.

To omit many other instances, that of sister Mary of the Incarnation has too close a connection with the history of cardinal Berulle, to be passed over.

A virtuous lady of Paris was a great assistant to the cardinal in his pious foundations, especially that of the Carmelite nuns. Her name was Barbara Aurillot, by marriage Acharie. Having lived in the world remarkable for her great charities, devotions, and mortifications, being a widow, she was professed a lay-sister in the poor house of the Carmelite nuns in Amiens: for she declined the great nunnery in Paris, in founding which she had been greatly instrumental. It is not to be expressed with what reluctance the nuns consented to receive a person of her quality, their mistress and foundress in France, as a servant; and Dr du Val, joint superior with Berulle, and the nuns, opposed the design: but Berulle, discerning in her request a sincere spirit of humility, would not have her lose the merit of that virtue, and prevailed that her request should be granted. She with joy undertook to serve in the kitchen, and as second sister in keeping the house clean.

She

miracles, when he himself lay sick of a fever, and his life seemed despaired of, he was suddenly restored to health by a vision of the Blessed Virgin, in which he fell into a wonderful rapture, and cried out, "O most holy Mother of God, what have I done, that you should vouchsafe to come to me?" Coming to himself, he said unawares to four physicians that were present: "Did not you see the Blessed Mother of God, who by her visit hath driven away my distemper?" But immediately perceiving that he had discovered his vision, he besought them not to disclose it to any one. This was attested upon oath by Galloni and four physicians that were present. Under the sharpest pains in his sickness, no complaint, groan or stir, ever was observed in him: only he was sometimes heard softly to repeat these words: Adauge dolorem, sed adauge patientiam. "Increase my pains, but increase withal my patience." On several occasions he exactly foretold things to come. Baronius and others testified, that they had heard several predictions from his mouth which the events always confirmed.

St Philip was of a sickly constitution, and was usually visited every year by one or two sharp fevers, which sometimes held him a long time: yet he lived to a good old age. In 1595, he lay all the month of April sick of a very violent fever: and in the beginning of May was taken with a vomiting of blood, discharging a very large quantity. Cæsar Baronius gave him extreme-unction; and when the hemorrhage had ceased, cardinal Frederic Borromeo brought him the Viaticum. When the saint saw the cardinal entering his chamber with the holy sacrament, to the amazement of all that were present, he cried out with a loud voice, and abundance of tears; "Behold my Love, my Love! He comes, the only delight of my soul. Give me my Love quickly." He repeated with the cardinal, in the most tender sentiments of devotion and love, those words, Domine, non sum dignus, adding, "I was never worthy to be fed with thy body: nor have I ever done any good at all." After receiving the Viaticum, he said: "I have received my physician into my lodging." He had procured many masses to be said for him, and in two or three days seemed perfectly recovered, said mass every day, heard confessions as usual, and enjoyed a good state of health. He foretold to several persons, and frequently, his approaching death, and the very day of it, as they declared upon oath. (11) On the three last days of his life, he was overwhelmed with more than ordinary spiritual love, especially on the day that he died, on which he counted every hour, waiting for the end of the day, which he foresaw to be the moment in which his soul would ingulph itself into the ocean of immortal bliss. Being taken with another fit of vomiting blood, Baronius reading the recommendation of the soul, he, with great tranquillity, expired just after midnight, between the 25th and 26th of May 1595, being near fourscore and two years old. His body was opened, and the place where his ribs were burst, and the skin projected to the bigness of a man's fist, was seen by many. His heart and bowels were buried among his brethren, but his body was enshrined, and found uncorrupted seven years after. One Austin Magistrius, who for many years had been troubled with loathsome running ulcers in his neck, which physicians had judged incurable, hearing of the death of the saint, went to the church where his body was exposed; and, after praying long before his hearse, applied his blessed hands to his sore neck, and found himself immediately cured: which miracle five eye-witnesses attested upon oath. Other like miracles, several testified by the oaths of the parties, are related by Galloni, the disciple of the saint, and an assistant of Baronius in compiling his annals: also by Baccius and others. Seven years after the saint's death in 1602, Nerus de

She was called, in religion, Mary of the Incarnation, and is regarded as foundress, under cardinal Berulle, of the French Teresian nuns. After her solemn vows, she was removed to Pontoise, and there died in 1618, fifty-two years old. See her edifying life by F. Hervè, the Oratorian.

(11) See Galloni and Baccius, l. 4. c. 2.

Nigris, a Florentin gentleman, built a sumptuous chapel beautified with costly ornaments in the church of the Oratory, and the holy man's body, which was found entire, was removed into it. Many miracles were wrought at his tomb, and by his intercession. (12) He was canonized by Gregory XV. in 1622.

St Philip, inflamed with the love of God, and a desire of praising him worthily, after offering him all the affections of his soul, and the homages of all his creatures, seeing in their poverty and inability nothing equal to his infinite greatness, comforted himself in finding in the mass a means of glorifying him by a victim worthy of himself. This he offered to him with inexpressible joy, devotion and humility, to praise and honour his holy name, to be a sacrifice of perfect thanksgiving for his infinite benefits, of expiation for sin, and of impetration to obtain all graces. Hence in this sacrifice he satiated the ardent desires of his zeal, and found such an excess of overflowing love and sweetness in the closest union of his soul with his divine redeemer.

ST AUGUSTINE, APOSTLE OF THE ENGLISH, B. C.

From Bede, b. i. ch. 23, &c. and the letters and life of St Gregory.

A. D. 604.

THE Saxons, English and Jutes, pagan Germans, who, in this island began, in 454, to expel the old Britons into the mountainous part of the country, had reigned here about 150 years, when God was pleased to open their eyes to the light of the gospel. (a) St

(12) See an account of several testified upon oath by competent vouchers in Baccius, l. 5.

(a) The Saxons are placed by Ptolemy, when they became first known to the Romans, at the back of the Cimbrians. Grotius, in his history of the Goths, proves them to have been originally Getae or Goths, who passed from Sweden into Germany: he also shews, that

Gregory the Great, before his pontificate, had desired to become himself their apostle: but was hindered by the people of Rome, who would by no means suffer that the Scythian Getæ founded the Gothic nation. And it is evident from the English Saxon, the Mæsothian and other Grammars, printed by Dr Hicks, that the English Saxon language is derived from the Gothic or that of the Scythian Getæ, which was Celtic in its ground. That the Celtic language was brought from Scythia in Asia, in the migrations of the first colonies, and was the ground and original of the Teutonic, and all the other languages anciently used in Gaul, Scandinavia, Britain, and almost all Europe, is very well proved by Pelloutier, Hist. des Celtes, l. 1. c. 15. p. 155. Mallet only excepts the Sarmatian, the Grecian (derived in part from the Egyptian) and the Roman (partly derived from the Grecian). This language remains most entire in those countries which were never subject to the Romans, chiefly in Ireland and the north of Sweden. The Teutonic or Gothic of the fourth and fifth centuries has an affinity with the Welsh tongue, and that of Lower Britany and Biscay, and seems to have some with the Irish. The ancient Etruscan is supposed to have been a dialect of the Celtic. The modern French and Spanish, though dialects of the Latin, still retain many Celtic words. The Danish, Norwegian and Swedish, are evidently dialects of the Celtic, and are allied to the German, especially that used in Lower Germany. The Asiatic Scythian colony, which Odin or Woden settled in the Southern provinces of Scandinavia and the Northern of Germany, introduced a softer dialect of the Celtic, with some new words and new terminations. This was the English Saxon tongue. See Mallet, Introd. à l'histoire de Dannemarck, l. 5. p. 236. It may be added, that the ancient Saxons brought into England the religion and idols of the Goths, the same which the Danes, Swedes and Norwegians, who all descended from the Goths, likewise worshipped; as Thor, the God of thunder, like the Roman Jupiter, from whom Thursday takes its name: Woden, the chief god and the god of war, from whom Wednesday is derived: Friga or Frea his wife, the goddess of love like Venus, from whom comes the name of Friday. Tuesday seems called, not from the peculiar god of the Germans, Tuiscō, as Verstegan imagines, but either from Tys, a son of Woden from whom the islanders call it Tysdag, or rather from Dysa or Thisa, the wife of Thor, the goddess of Justice, to whom several temples were built among the Swedes and Danes. See on the mythology and divinities of the Celtes, Schedius de Diis Germanis; Pelloutier, Hist. des Celtes, T. 2. l. 3. Mallet, Introd. à l'hist. de Dannem. l. 2. p. 48. and his comments on the Edda, or Islandic mythology, compiled by Snorro Sturleson; Sammes, Antiq. of Brit. &c. The Swedes, Danes, Gauls, and all the Celtes, sacrificed men to Thor before any great enterprise. The Saxons, crossing the Weser, acquired a new settlement near the coast, towards Friseland, and by their piracies grew terrible to the Romans in the fourth and fifth centuries, as appears from Ammianus Marcellinus, the poet Claudian him to leave that city. This undertaking, however, he had very much at heart, and never ceased to recommend to God the souls of this infidel nation. When Claudian and Orosius. The Angles seem to have been a tribe of the Cimbrians; and the Jutes (so called from their ancestors the Getæ) inhabited Jutland. All the Danish, Swedish and Saxon writers, say that Woden was a Goth, who, returning with an army of adventurers from the Asiatic Scythia, or Georgia beyond the Palus Mœotis, settled with his people in Jutland, and was a great conqueror in those parts, about seventy years before Christ. From this Woden, all the first English Saxon kings, who founded the Heptarchy in England, are said to have descended. Their pedigrees are published by Dr Gale, at the end of his last volume. Mallet suspects that as Odin or Woden, the Asiatic Scythian conqueror of the North, took the name of the ancient god of the country, which was favourable to his ambitious views, so other princes seem to have made this a name of dignity. But we must allow that all the first English Saxon kings were descended from the same conqueror who bore that name. Hengist, the first king of Kent, was only the fifth from Woden. The Britons, being abandoned by the Romans, who had drained the country of its soldiery and strength, and being cowardly, vicious, full of mutual contentions, and extremely addicted to drunkenness and debauchery, were unable to withstand the Picts and Scots, and implored the succour of the Saxons, who, under Hengist and Horsa, two brothers, defeated the Picts in Lincolnshire, and received for their recompense of king Vortigern a settlement in Kent. But seeing the cowardice and weakness of the Britons, they invited over their countrymen from Germany, and seized the country of the Britons, whom they drove into the mountains of Wales, though, after the death of the vicious British kings Vortigern and Vortimer, Aurelius Ambrosius (who from the command of the army was advanced to the throne) and afterward king Arthur, during a reign of twenty-seven years, made a glorious stand. Hengist arrived in Britain in 449, but was only chosen king of Kent eight years after, in 457; Ethelbert, his fourth descendant, came to the crown in 561. From the Jutes came the inhabitants of Kent, Hampshire, and the isle of Wight; from the Saxons, the East-Saxons, South-Saxons and West-Saxons: and from the Angles, the East-Angles, Mercians and Northumbrians. The kingdom of the South Saxons contained Sussex, Surry, and the isle of Wight; that of the East-Saxons, Essex, Middlesex, and part of Hertfordshire: that of the West-Saxons or Gevissians, Hampshire, Berkshire, Wiltshire, Dorsetshire, Somersetshire and Devonshire: that of Kent, the county of that name: that of the East-Angles, Norfolk, Suffolk, the isle of Ely, and part of Hertfordshire: that of the Mercians, Lincolnshire, Nottinghamshire, Derbyshire, Cheshire, Shropshire, Staffordshire, Warwickshire, Leicestershire, Northamptonshire, Rutlandshire, Huntingdonshire, Bedfordshire, Buckinghamshire, Oxfordshire, Worcestershire, Herefordshire and Gloucestershire: that of the Northumbrians, subdivided into the provinces of Deira to the

he was placed in the apostolic chair, he immediately turned his thoughts towards this abandoned part of the vineyard, and resolved to send hither a select number of zealous labourers. For this great work none seemed better qualified than Augustine, then prior of St Gregory's monastery, dedicated to St. Andrew in Rome. Him therefore the pope appointed superior of this mission, allotting him several assistants, who were Roman monks. The powers of hell trembled at the sight of this little troop, which marched against them armed only with the cross, by which they had been stripped of their empire over men. Zeal and obedience gave these saints courage, and they set out with joy upon an expedition of which the prize was to be either the conquest of a new nation to Christ, or the crown of martyrdom for themselves. But the devils found means to throw a stumbling-block in their way. St Gregory had recommended them to several French bishops on their road, of whom they were to learn the circumstances of their undertaking, and prepare themselves accordingly. But when the missionaries were advanced several days journey, probably as far as Aix in Provence, certain persons, with many of those to whom they were addressed, exaggerated to them the ferocity of the English people, the difference of manners, the difficulty of the language, the dangers of the sea, and other such obstacles, in such a manner that they deliberated whether it was prudent to proceed: the result of which consultation was, that Augustine should be deputed back to St Gregory, to lay before him these difficulties, and to beg leave for them to return to Rome. The pope, well apprised of the artifices of the devil, saw in these retardments themselves greater motives of confidence in God; for where the enemy is most active; and obstacles seem greatest

the south and Bernicia to the north, comprised Yorkshire, Lancashire, Westmoreland, Cumberland, Durham, Northumberland, and part of Scotland as far as the Frith. See Sammes, Antiq. Brit. Tyrrell; Joannis Georgii Eccardi de Origine Germanorum eorumque coloniis & migrationibus, &c. Studio Christ. Lud. Scheidii, Goettingæ, 1750, in 4to.

in the divine service, there we have reason to conclude that the work is of the greater importance, and that the success will be the more glorious. Souls are never prepared for an eminent virtue and the brightest crowns, but by passing through great trials. This, though often immediately owing to the malice of the devil, is permitted by God, and is an effect of his all-wise providence to raise the fervour of his servants for the exceeding increase of their virtue. St Gregory therefore sent Augustine back with a letter of encouragement to the rest of the missionaries, representing to them the cowardice of abandoning a good work when it is begun; exhorting them not to listen to the evil suggestions of railing men, and expressing his desire of the happiness of bearing them company, and sharing in their labours, had it been possible. The temptation being removed, the apostolic labourers pursued their journey with great alacrity, and taking some Frenchmen for interpreters along with them, (b) landed in the isle of Thanet, on the east side of Kent, in the year 596, being with their interpreters near forty persons. From this place St Augustine sent to Ethelbert, the powerful king of Kent, signifying that he was come from Rome, and brought him a most happy message, with an assured divine promise of a kingdom which would never have an end. The king ordered them to remain in that island, where he took care they should be furnished with all necessaries, whilst he deliberated what to do. This great prince held in subjection all the other English kings who commanded on this side the Humber: nor was he a stranger to the Christian religion; for his queen Bertha, a daughter of Caribert, king of Paris, was a Christian, and had with her Luidhard, bishop of

(b) The Franks and English Saxons were equally German nations; the former came 130 years earlier from beyond the Rhine; the latter from the countries about the mouths of the Rhine and the Elbe, and about Holstein, or the continent of Denmark, still called Jutland. Hence the French and English both had the same language, as bishop Godwin observes from this circumstance. This is confirmed by other clear proofs by the learned and judicious William Howel, in his institution of General History, l. 4. p. 435.

Senlis, for her director and almoner. After some days, the king went in person to the isle, but sat in the open air to admit Augustine to his presence! for he had a superstitious notion, that if he came with any magical spell, this would have an effect upon him under the cover of a house, but could have none in the open fields. The religious men came to him in procession, "carrying for their banner a silver cross, and an image of our Saviour painted on a board; and singing the litany as they walked, made humble prayer for themselves, and for the souls of those to whom they came." Being admitted into the presence of the king, they announced to him the word of life. His majesty listened attentively: but answered, that their words and promises indeed were fair, but new, and to him uncertain: however, that since they were come a great way for his sake, they should not be molested, nor hindered from preaching to his subjects. He also appointed them necessary subsistence, and a dwelling-place in Canterbury, the capital city of his dominions. They came thither in procession, singing, and imitated the lives of the apostles, serving God in prayer, watching and fasting; despising the things of this world, as persons who belonged to another, and ready to suffer or die for the faith which they preached. There stood near the city an old church of St Martin, left by the Britons. In this was the queen accustomed to perform her devotions, and in it the apostolic preachers began to meet, sing, say mass, preach and baptize, till the king being converted, they had licence to repair and build churches every where. Several among the people were converted, and received the holy sacrament of regeneration; and in a short time the king himself, whose conversion was followed by innumerable others.

Bede says, that St Augustine after this went back to Arles to Etherius, bishop of that city, from whose hands he received the episcopal consecration: but for Etherius we must read Virgilius, who was at that time archbishop of Arles, Etherius being bishop of Lyons.

(c) The reason why he went so far, seems to have been, because the archbishop of Arles was not only primate, but apostolic legate in Gaul; and Augustine probably wanted his advice in many things. The saint had baptized the king, and was himself ordained bishop before October 597; within the space of one year: for the letter of St Gregory, to encourage the missionaries in France to proceed, was dated on the 10th of August 596. In 598, the same pope wrote to Eulogius, patriarch of Alexandria, that Augustine had been ordained bishop, with his licence, by the German prelates: so he calls the French, because they came from Germany. He adds, "In the last solemnity of our Lord's nativity, more than ten thousand of the English nation were baptized by this our brother and fellow-bishop."

St Augustine, immediately after his return into Britain, sent Lawrence and Peter to Rome to solicit a supply of more labourers, and they brought over several excellent disciples of pope Gregory; among whom were Mellitus, the first bishop of London, Justus the first bishop of Rochester, Paulinus, the first archbishop of York, and Rufinianus, the third abbot of Augustine's. "With this colony of new missionaries, the holy pope sent all things in general for the divine worship and the service of the church; viz. sacred vessels, altar cloths, ornaments for churches, and vestments for priests and clerks: relicks of the holy apostles and martyrs, and many books," as Bede writes. (1) St Augustine wrote frequently to St Gregory, whom he consulted in the least difficulties

(1) Bede, hist. b. i. c. 29.

(c) See the Benedictins in their life of St Gregory: also Mrs Eliz. Elstob. Wharton thinks St Augustine was ordained in France before he went over into England, because St Gregory, in his letter to queen Brunehilde in October 597, styles him his brother and fellow-bishop. But the express testimony of Bede is not to be so easily set aside: and had St Augustine been first sent over bishop, he would have rather been ordained before he left Rome. He might have baptized the king, and made his journey to Arles within the space of one year. Which account best agrees with the letters of St Gregory, as the Benedictins remark.

which occurred in his ministry ; which shews the tenderness of his conscience ; for in many things which he might have decided by his own learning and prudence, he desired to render his conscience more secure by the advice and decision of his chief pastor. The same pope wrote to the abbot Mellitus, (2) directing the idols to be destroyed, and their temples to be changed into Christian churches, by purifying and sprinkling them with holy water, and erecting altars, and placing relicks in them ; thus employing the spoils of Egypt to the service of the living God. He permits the celebration of wakes on the anniversary feasts of the dedications of the churches, and on the solemnities of the martyrs, to be encouraged among the people, the more easily to withdraw them from their heathenish riotous festivals.

The good king Ethelbert laboured himself in promoting the conversion of his subjects during the twenty remaining years of his life ; he enacted wholesome laws, abolished the idols, and shut up their temples throughout his dominions. He thought he had gained a kingdom, when he saw one of his subjects embrace the faith, and looked upon himself as king only, that he might make the King of kings be served by others. He built Christ-church, the cathedral in Canterbury, upon the same spot where formerly had stood a heathenish temple. He also founded the abbey of SS. Peter and Paul without the walls of that city, since called St Augustine's, the church of St Andrew in Rochester, &c. He brought over to the faith Sebert, the pious king of the East-Saxons, and Redwald, king of the East-Angles, though the latter, Samaritan-like, worshipped Christ with his idols. Ethelbert reigned fifty-six years, and departed to our Lord in 616. He was buried in the abbey-church of SS. Peter and Paul, which himself had founded. He had been baptized in the church of St Pancras, which St Augustine had dedicated, and which had been a pagan temple, on that very spot where he built soon after Christ-church, as is mentioned in an old manuscript preserved in the library of Trinity Hall in Cambridge, quoted by Spelman (3) and Tyrrel. St Ethelbert is commemorated in the Roman martyrology on the twenty-fourth of February.

(2) Ib. ch. 30.

St Gregory, in the year 600, sent, with many noble presents, a letter of congratulation and of excellent advice to king Ethelbert. He in the same year sent to St Augustine the archiepiscopal pall, with authority to ordain twelve bishops, who should be subject to his metropolitan see; ordering that when the northern English should have embraced the faith, he should ordain a bishop of York, who should likewise be a metropolitan, with twelve suffragan bishops. But particular circumstances afterwards required some alterations in the execution of this order. The fame of many miracles wrought by St Augustine in the conversion of the English having reached Rome, St Gregory wrote to him, (4) exhorting him to beware of the temptation of pride or vain-glory, "in the great miracles and heavenly gifts which God shewed in the nation which he had chosen. Wherefore, (says he,) amidst those things which you exteriorly perform, always interiorly judge yourself, and thoroughly understand both what you are yourself, and how great a grace is given in that nation for the conversion of which you have even received the gift of working miracles. And if you remember that you have ever at any time offended your Creator either by word or deed, always have that before your eyes, to the end that the remembrance of your guilt may crush the vanity rising in your heart. And whatever you shall receive or have received in relation to the working of miracles, esteem the same not as conferred on you, but on those for whose salvation it hath been given you." He observes to him, that when the disciples returned with joy, and said to our Lord: In thy name be the devils subject unto us, they presently received a rebuke: rejoice not in this, but rather that your names are written in heaven.

(3) Cone. Brit. T. I.

(4) Bede, b. 1. ch. 31.

St Augustine ordained St Mellitus bishop of the East-Saxons in London, and St Justus bishop of Rochester; and seeing the faith now spread wide on every side, he took upon him, by virtue of his metropolitan and legatine authority, which the pope had conferred upon him over all the bishops of Britain, to make a general visitation of his province. He desired very much to see the ancient Britons, whom the English had driven to the mountains of Wales, reclaimed from certain abuses which had crept in among them, and to engage them to assist him in his labours in converting the English. But malice, and an implacable hatred against that nation, blinded their understandings, and hardened their hearts. However, being on the confines of the Wiccians and West-Saxons; that is, on the edge of Worcestershire; not far from Wales, he invited the British bishops and doctors to a conference. They met him at a place which was called, at the time when Bede wrote, Augustine's Oak.

(d) The zealous apostle employed both intreaties and exhortations, and required of them three things: 1st, That they should assist him in preaching the gospel to the pagan English: 2dly, That they should observe Easter at the due time; and, 3dly, That they should agree with the universal church in the manner of administering baptism. But they obstinately refused to comply with his desires. Whereupon St Augustine proposed, by a divine impulse, that a sick or impotent person should be brought in, and that their tradition should be followed as agreeable to God, by whose prayer he should be cured. The condition was accepted, though very unwillingly: and a blind man was brought, and presented first to the British priests, but found no benefit by their prayers or other endeavours. Then Augustine bowed his knees to God, praying, that, by restoring the sight to this blind man, he would make his spiritual light shine on the souls of many. Upon which, the blind man immediately recovered his sight, and the Britons confessed that they believed that the doctrine which Augustine preached, was the truth; but said, that without the general consent of their nation, they could not quit their ancient rites and customs. Wherefore, they desired that a general synod of their country should be held. Accordingly, a second more numerous council was assembled, in which appeared several British bishops (their annals say seven) and many learned men, especially from the monastery of Bangor, which stood in Flintshire, not far from the river Dee, not in the city of Bangor, in Carnarvonshire. A little before they came, they sent to consult a famous hermit among them, whether they should receive Augustine, or reject his admonitions, and retain their ancient usages. He bade them so to contrive it, that Augustine and his company should come first to the place of this synod, and said, that if he should arise when they approached, they should look upon him as humble, and should hear and obey him; but if he should not rise to them, that were more in number, then they should despise him. They took this ignorant and blind direction, and, instead of weighing the justice and equity of the archbishop's demands, his right and truth of his doctrine, committed this important decision to a trifling casual circumstance or punctilio. They had before confessed that he taught the truth, and he had convinced them, both by reasons and a miracle, that he only required of them what charity and obedience to the church, in points of discipline, obliged them to: nevertheless, revenge and malice against the English made them still stand out, and have recourse to the most idle pretence. (a)

(d) This conference was held after St Austin was consecrated archbishop; consequently after the year 601. Spelman thinks the place to have been Ausric, that town being situated on the edge of Worcestershire, toward Herefordshire; for Augustine's ric, in the English Saxon language, signifies Austin's patrimony or country.

(a) The Britons might have suspended their submission to Augustine, as their new metropolitan, without questioning the pope's authority. St Gregory knew he had power to alter the metropolitanical jurisdiction of particular churches, when circumstances made such an alteration necessary, or exceedingly expedient. We have of this several instances in the history of the church in those very ages. Thus

Strong endeavours to do wrong God usually punishes with success. It so happened, that when they entered the place of the synod, Augustin  did not rise from his seat ; whether this was done by inadvertence, or because it might be the custom of the countries where he had been, not to use those compliments in public places, at least in synods, any more than in churches. But, whatever was the occasion, nothing could be more unreasonable than the conclusion which the Britons drew from this circumstance. Had the inference been just, the archbishop did not lose his right, nor was his doctrine the less true. His humility and charity were otherwise conspicuous. He was come so far for their sake, and out of humility was accustomed to travel on foot. Nor did he in this conference mention his own dignity or authority : he seems even to have waved the point of his primacy : which from his

Thus pope Zozimus declared the archbishop of Arles to be primate of Gaul by ancient right, out of respect to St Trophimus (See de Marca de Primat. p. 169.) Yet Boniface I. and Celestine I. both exempted the whole province of Narbonne from any obedience or subjection to the church of Arles : and Leo I. declared the archbishop of Vienne primate ; till, after the death of St Hilary, he restored the primacy of part of those provinces to Arles : and St Gregory the Great, Vigilius, Pelagius, Symmachus, &c. maintained the primacy of Arles. Not that the pope is at discretion to infringe the privileges of churches, which he is bound to maintain : neither is the jurisdiction of churches to be altered, but upon cogent reasons of public necessity and utility. Such St Gregory thought the reformation of the Britons to be, who, by the testimony of Gildas, were sunk into the lowest degree of ignorance and barbarism, so as to retain little more than the name of Christians. Yet that the Britons might deny the necessity of such change, and be tenacious of their ancient hierarchy, is no way surprising, and what others might have done for some time. But their true reason appears to have been, their implacable hatred against the English ; which betrayed them into glaring injustice and impiety.

The Welsh manuscript printed by Spelman makes them to disclaim any foreign supremacy : but is an evident piece of forgery, not so old as the Reformation, as is demonstrated by Mr Turberville, Manual of Controversies, p. 406. and Dr Hauarden, Preface to Church of Christ shewed, T. 2. p. 20. Nor was there at that time any archbishop of Caer-leon upon Usk ; the metropolitan see having been translated from that city to Landaff by St Dubritius : and soon after by St David to Menew, almost fourscore years before the arrival of St Augustine.

charity we cannot doubt but he would have been glad to have procured leave to resign to their own archbishop of St David's, had the Britons been willing on such terms to have conformed to the discipline of the universal church, and lay aside their rancour against the English. However, upon this ridiculous pretence, did that nation remain obstinate in their malice. (f) Which St Augustine seeing, he foretold them, that "if they would not preach to the English the way of life, they would fall by their hands under the judgment of death." This prediction was not fulfilled 'till

(f) That the British Christians agreed in faith with the universal church is clear, 1st, From St Augustine, who demanded of them only three things, namely, charity towards the English, and conformity in two points of discipline. Any difference in faith would have been mentioned in the first place. 2dly, The Britons confessed that the faith of Augustine was the truth, as Bede testifies. 3dly, They had lived in a perpetual intercourse and communion with the churches of Gaul, Rome, &c. Pope Celestine sent St Palladius to preach to the Scots, and St Patrick to the Irish. St Ninian, a Briton, studied at Rome before he preached in his own country, where he died in 432. 4thly, The primitive Christians were so watchful and jealous in preserving the purity of the faith derived from Christ and his apostles, that the least adulteration or change introduced by any bishop or private person was immediately observed, and corrected or punished by excommunication, as all the writings of the fathers, the councils, and all ancient monuments of the church, evince. 5thly, Gildas and Bede testify that the faith remained untainted, and without the least division in Britain, till the Arian heresy, under Constantius, shot its baneful sprouts in this island; which were, however, extirpated. Pelagianism had no sooner infected this church, but the Gaulish bishops deputed hither SS. Germanus and Lupus, who checked the growing evil, and preserved this flock. Pope Celestine had vested St Germanus with the legatine authority for this purpose, as St Prosper testifies in his chronicle. Lastly, Gildas, who was a learned divine, and lived many years both in Britain and abroad, always in communion with the universal church, and has left us the most severe invectives against the vices of the Britons, bears testimony to the purity of their faith, which had suffered no alteration, except from these attempts of Arianism and Pelagianism. He therefore accuses them only for their crimes of tyranny, murders, extortions, adulteries, impurities, sacrilegious marriages under religious vows. (L. de Excidio Britan. Bibl. Patr. T. 5. part. 3. p. 681. ed. Color.) As to their clergy, he censures them as un-ebaste, drunkards, slothful, baters of reading, seldom offering sacrifice, seldom standing at the altar with a pure heart. Corrupt. in Clerum, (ib. p. 682.)

after the death of St Augustine, as Bede expressly testifies, (5) when Ethilfrid, king of the northern English, who were yet pagans, gave the Britons a terrible overthrow near Caer-legion or Chester, and seeing the monks of Bangor praying at a distance, he cried out after the victory: "If they pray against us, they fight against us by their hostile imprecations." And rushing upon them with his army, he slew twelve hundred of them, or, according to Florence of Worcester, 2200. For so numerous was this monastery, that being divided into seven companies, under so many superiors, each division consisted of at least 300 monks, and, whilst some were at work, others were at prayer. Their obstinate refusal of the essential obligation of charity towards the English was a grievous crime, and drew upon them this chastisement; but we hope the sin extended no farther than to some of the superiors. This massacre was predicted by St Augustine as a divine punishment; but those who accuse him as an instigator of it, are strangers to the spirit and bowels of most tender charity, which the saint bore towards all the world, who knew no other arms against impenitent sinners and persecutors than those of compassion, and tears and prayers for their conversion. And, long before the accomplishment of this threat and prophecy in 607, St Augustine was translated to glory (a), as appears from several circumstances related by Bede himself, though the year of his death is not expressed by that historian, nor in his epitaph, which seems composed before the custom of counting dates by the æra of Christ was introduced in this island, though it began to be used at Rome by Dionysius Exiguus, an abbot, in 550.

St Augustine, whilst yet living, ordained Laurence his successor in the see of Canterbury, not to leave at his death an infant church destitute of a pastor.

(5) Hist. l. 2. c. 2.

(a) See this demonstrated by Wharton, Anglia Sacra; Tyrrell, T. 1. &c.

(b) He died on the 26th of May : and as William Thorn says, from a very ancient book of his life, in the same year with St Gregory, viz. 604 ; which Mr Whar-

(b) Neither gratitude, nor the great veneration which our ancestors have ever paid to the memory of St Augustine, have been able to protect his name in our times from the envenomed darts of slander : and, among others, Rapin hath disgraced several pages of his history with the most bitter invectives against our apostle. Had any actions of this saint appeared equivocal, the law of equity and charity would have obliged us to construe them in a favourable sense. We judge of actions and intentions in ambiguous cases by the known character and steady conduct of the person. But by these envenomed writers, the very virtues of a saint have been transformed into vices. It is said, that he betrayed an excessive pusillanimity in Gaul. But he only suffered himself to be persuaded by those Fench bishops to whom he had been referred by St Gregory, for immediate intelligence about the English nation, that the undertaking was not prudent : and upon this information he consulted St Gregory, and governed himself by his advice, because he sought only the will of God. If any pusillanimity could be here laid to his charge, his zeal certainly made a speedy amends. It is, 2dly, urged, that the English were previously disposed to receive the faith by queen Bertha. But the French bishops were unacquainted with such an inclination in that people : and apprehended the mission to be most dangerous, and success impossible. The English were perfidious, and the fiercest and most savage of all the barbarians of that age, as our own historians call them, and as their actions shew ; yet these men Augustine civilized by his preaching, and rendered mild, humble, and patient, despisers of the goods of the world, and in fervour and sanctity surpassing all the nations of the earth.

These authors urge, that he converted only Kent : but many other English provinces owed their faith to his labours, or to others who preached under his direction, though the conversion of Kent alone was an abundant field for his zeal. Rapin indeed omits the most severe censure of archbishop Parker, that St Augustine did not oblige the English Saxons to restore the whole country to the Britons. By which principle our Norman gentry would be obliged to resign their lands to God knows who, the Scots theirs to the old Caledonians ; all nations in the world would be unhinged, and the unanimous conduct of the apostles of the Franks, Vandals, Goths, &c. and that of the bishops and saints of all ages, equally condemned. For public peace and tranquillity being the chief end of civil government, by the law of nations, prescription, when of so long standing, hath been always allowed to give a right. And this the public peace and tranquillity of the whole world make necessary : which general peace and weal of the community, is the great end of society and government, to which inferior motives and rules are to give place. According to the principle of archbishop Parker, the Romans themselves ought to have been ton proves from several other authorities. (6) Goscelin, a monk of Canterbury in 1096, besides two lives of St Augustine, compiled a book of his miracles been also outed, and the poor descendants of the old Aborigines every where sought out, and made lords of the country. In cases of settlements of whole nations, restitution becomes in a little time impossible. and the law of nations then gives a right for the sake of public peace and necessity.

(6) Anglia Sacra, T. 1. p. 89.

If we judge of the sanctity of St Augustine, and his fellow-labourers, by the wonderful fruit which their zealous labours produced, we must entertain the highest idea of their virtue. The English before their arrival were a barbarous nation, ambitious, avaricious, fierce, perfidious, and utter strangers to the very names of the sciences and liberal arts. When they came first into Britain they seem not so much as to have known the use of letters, but to have borrowed their first alphabet from the Irish. The Northumbrians, according to Malmesbury, sold their own children for slaves, surpassing in barbarism and fierceness the negroes at this day. But receiving readily the holy faith, they became at once new men, meek, patient, humble chaste, mortified: in a word, a church of saints. The converts, being mightily taken with the powerful preaching and exemplary lives of their teachers, set themselves with so great ardour both to learn and practise the most perfect maxims of salvation, as entirely to despise the world. The princes and nobles were very zealous in building and endowing churches and religious houses. To form a judgement of their liberality in this respect, it is sufficient to mention one or two instances. Ina, the religious and victorious king of the West-Saxons, after having reigned thirty-two years, and acquired great glory by many warlike triumphs, and settled the public peace by wholesome laws, (extant in Spelman conc. T. 1.) being arrived at the highest pitch of human felicity, abdicated his crown in 728, and went to Rome with his queen, not to shew himself to the world, but to hide himself from it, being there shorn a monk, and growing old in the austerities and mean habit of that profession, whilst his queen put on a religious veil in the same city. This king gave two thousand six hundred and forty pounds weight of silver to make a chapel at Glastenbury; two hundred sixty four pounds of gold for the altar; the chalice and paten had ten pounds of gold; the censer eight pounds and twenty manc of gold; the candlesticks twelve pounds of silver; the covers of the book of the gospels twenty pounds and forty manc or marks of gold; the vessels of the altar seventeen pounds of gold; the basons eight pounds of gold; the vessel for the holy water, twenty pounds of silver; the images of our Lord, St Mary, and the twelve apostles, one hundred seventy five pounds of silver, and thirty eight pounds of gold; the altar and priestly vestments were all interwoven with gold and precious stones. (Stevens, vol. I. p. 422. from 15 scriptor. vol. I. p. 311. Reyner, vol. I.

wrought since his death, and an history of the translation of his relicks in 1091, which was accompanied with several miracles, to which this author was

p. 44. Henschenius ad 6 Febr. in vitâ Inæ.) King Athelstan gave thirty six towns to the church of Exeter, (Monast. Angl. vol. I. p. 225.) The sanctity of many of these kings gives a lustre to the ages in which they lived. The royal dignity being attended with honour, power and riches, though often beset with secret thorns, has attractives so strong in the minds of worldlings, that before Christianity made such examples frequent, it was unheard of that a king, out of mere greatness of soul, should lay down a crown, to obtain which, many spared not parents or children. Dioclesian indeed had done it, influenced by the base motive of cowardice. But a lively faith taught the English kings to despise crowns, and to exchange them for a poor monk's cowl. In Speed's history of Great Britain, (p. 243. 244.) mention is made of eight kings, and two queens, that renounced the world, and put on the religious habit. The learned and exact author of the preface to the Monasticon testifies, (p. 9.) that within two hundred years thirty English Saxon kings and queens, in the midst of peace and prosperity, resigned their crowns to embrace the monastic state.

How saintly the deportment of the clergy and monks at that time was; with what zeal they applied themselves to the functions of the ministry, and the care of souls; how perfect was their spirit of poverty and disinterestedness; how mortified and recollected were their lives, we may gather from Bede, l. 3. c. 20. l. 4. c. 27, &c. Even so late as the year 824, Vetin, the monk of Richenou, in the account of his visions, is said to have been taught by an angel, that the monastic life flourished in its perfection, with true poverty of spirit, beyond the seas, which in that age could not be understood but of England. (Apud Canis. Lect. Ant. Mabill. sæc. Ben. 4. & Fleury, l. 46. p. 220. T. 10.) which at least shews the reputation of the English monks abroad. This Order furnished England with its most illustrious lights of piety and learning, and produced apostolic men, to whose zeal the Netherlands, Germany, Sweden, Norway, and almost all the North, were principally indebted for their conversion to the faith.

Though before their conversion utterly illiterate, the English were no sooner enlightened by the faith, but they applied themselves with incredible ardour to cultivate their minds by studies, especially sacred learning. Bede is an early instance with what success. Many even among the nobility travelled to Rome and other foreign parts, to improve themselves in the sacred sciences. And what is of much greater importance, their fervour in practising all the maxims of christian perfection kept pace with, or was superior to, their ardour in learning them, curiosity and vanity having no share in these studies. Their holy ambition was, not to appear to men, but to be in their hearts and deportments, perfect Christians. To promote sacred literaan eye-witness. This work is given at length by Papebroke on this day. The second council of Cloveshoe, that is, Cliffe, in Kent, 747, under archbishop ture, the great monasteries had their public schools before universities were established, and in them the youth of the nobility and clergy were most frequently trained up. The art of printing not being then known, each monastery had its Scriptorium, for those who were employed in transcribing books; which was the usual occupation of the greater part of the monks for the hours allotted to manual labour; each monastery had also its library. There were 1,700 MSS. in the library at Peterborough. (See Gunton's Peterborough.) The library of the Grey Friars in London, built by Sir Richard Whittington, was 129 feet long, and thirty-one feet broad, and well filled with books. (Leland, Collect. vol. i. p. 109. Stow's Survey of London.) Ingulf tells us, that when the library at Croyland was burnt in 1091, they lost 700 books. The great library at Wells had twenty-five windows on each side of it, as Leland informs us, (Leland Itin. vol. III. p. 86.) At St Augustine's at Canterbury, prayers were always said for the benefactors to the library both alive and dead, (Will. Thorn inter script. and Tanner Not. Monast. Præf. p. 40.) In the other monasteries the like libraries were preserved: and in those of the greater monasteries were repositied the acts of parliament after the coming of the Normans; and under the English Saxons the principal decrees of the Wittena Gemote, or Mycel Gemote, i. e. great council or general assembly of the states; likewise the acts of Gemote or assemblies of lesser districts, as of hundreds. In several monasteries registers of the kings and public transactions were compiled and preserved, some of which have escaped the flames, as the Saxon Annals or Chronicles published by Edmund Gibson, at Oxford, in 1692. From such monastic chronicles, Florence of Worcester and William of Malmesbury declare that they compiled their histories. The destruction of these monuments is an irreparable loss in our history. Of which Tyrrell writes thus: (Tyrrell's hist. of Engl. p. 152.) "From the conversion of the Saxons, most of the laws, made in the Wittena Gemote, or great councils, were carefully preserved, and would have been conveyed to us more entire, had it not been for the loss of so many curious monuments of antiquity, at the suppression of monasteries, in the reign of king Henry VIII." Fanaticism and more than Gothic rage did not even spare the libraries of the two universities, especially the two most noble public libraries at Oxford, the one founded by Richard of Burg, or Richard Aungerville, lord treasurer of England and bishop of Durham, in the reign of Edward III. who spared no cost or pains to render this collection complete: the other furnished with books, by Thomas Cobham, bishop of Worcester, in 1367, and exceedingly augmented by king Henry IV. his sons, and by the addition of the library of the most noble prince Humfrey, duke of Gloucester, filled with curious manuscripts, got, at any rates, from foreign parts. Of the havock there made, Chamberlain (Present State of England, part III. p. 450.) complains

Cuthbert, Ethelbald' king of Mercia being present, commanded (7) his festival to be kept a holyday by all the clergy and religious (i), and the name of St complains in the following words : " These men, under pretence of rooting out popery, superstition and idolatry, utterly destroyed these two noble libraries, and embezzled, sold, burnt, or tore in pieces, all those valuable books, which those great patrons of learning had been so diligent in procuring in every country of Europe. Nay, their fury was so successful as to the Aungervillian library, which was the oldest, largest and choicest, that we have not so much as a catalogue of the books left. Nor did they rest here. They visited likewise the college-libraries, and one may guess at the work they made with them, by a letter still kept in the archives, where one of them boasts, that New-College quadrangle was all covered with the leaves of their torn books, &c. The university thought fit to complain to the government of this barbarity and covetousness of the visitors, but could not get any more by it than one single book, given to the library by John Whethamsted, the learned abbot of St Alban's, wherein is contained part of Valerius Maximus, with the commentaries of Dionysius de Burgo. And to this day, there is no book in the Bodleian library, besides this and two more, which are certainly known to have belonged to either of the former libraries. Nay, and the university itself, despairing ever to enjoy any other public library, thought it advisable to dispose of the very desks and shelves the books stood on, in the year 1555." Some few books indeed were accidentally redeemed out of the hands of the grocers: and archbishop Parker afterwards rescued gleanings of many valuable manuscripts, which treasure he bequeathed partly to the university library, but principally to Bennet-College in Cambridge. At Oxford, Sir Thomas Bodley, by a noble munificence never to be sufficiently extolled, founded a new public library, which was opened in 1602: and his example has been imitated by others. But their diligence was not able to retrieve many valuable manuscripts which were no more.

(7) Wilkins. Concil. Britan. T. 1. p. 97.

To return to St Augustine, the greater the fervour of the English was for the first ages after they were called to the faith, the more criminal was the fall of those who afterwards degenerated from that sanctity; notwithstanding the powerful influence of such examples. This their ingratitude drew upon them heavy chastisements by the inroads of the Danes, and other calamities that succeeded.

(i) What faith St Augustine brought into our island is plain from Bede's ecclesiastical history, who says, that those monks imitated the lives of the Apostles in frequent prayers, fastings and watchings, serving God, and preaching the word of life with all diligence. By going barefoot, the soles of St Augustine's feet were become callous. They taught religious vows, the excellency of perpetual chastity; confession of sins to a priest, with absolution and satisfaction; a precept

Augustine to be recited in the Litany immediately after that of St Gregory.

The body of St Augustine was deposited abroad till the church of SS. Peter and Paul, near the walls of Canterbury, which king Ethelbert built for the burying-place of the kings and archbishops, was finished; when it was laid in the porch, with this epitaph, which is preserved by Camden in his remains (8), and by Weever, in his funeral monuments (9). "Here rests lord Augustine, first archbishop of Canterbury, who being sent hither by the blessed Gregory bishop of Rome, and by God upheld by the working of miracles, (10) brought king Ethelbert and his nation from idolatry to the faith of Christ; and having completed the days of his office in peace, died on the 7th day before the calends of June, in the reign of the same king." In the same porch were interred also the six succeeding archbishops, Laurence, Mellitus, Justus, Honorius, Deusdedit, and Theodorus; these in their epitaph are called the seven patriarchs of England. The porch being by that time full, and the custom beginning to cept of fasting on Fridays, and in Lent: veneration of relicks, which devotion God confirmed with divers miracles; invocation of saints, and many miracles wrought through their intercession; purgatory, praying for the dead, which king Oswald practised with his last breath; holy water, and holy oil, both recommended by miracles: altars of stone, chalices, altar-cloths, the sacrifice of the mass, a number of lights, burning day and night at saints shrines, and other holy places; pictures of our Saviour; of our Lady; crosses of gold and silver; the holy eucharist reserved, and called the true body of Christ; exorcisms, blessing with the sign of the cross; the supremacy of the pope, to whom all greater causes were referred, by whose authority bishops went to preach to heathens, and whom Bede calls Bishop of the whole World. The same venerable historian styles St Peter the First Pastor of the Church; calls him by the ordinary name of Prince of the Apostles, &c. See these points shewn at large, in the book entitled, England's old religion, from Bede's own words; also in England's conversion and reformation compared. The same might be easily demonstrated from St Gregory's works. After this, we need not enquire any farther why Rapin and many other protestants discover so much rancour against this holy apostle of our country.

(8) P. 350. (9) P. 244. (10) A Deo operatione miraculorum suffultus.

allow persons of eminent dignity and sanctity to be buried within churches, St Brithwald, the 8th archbishop, was interred in the church of this abbey in 731; and near him his successor St Tatwin. Weever says, besides the first archbishops, and the kings of Kent, thousands of others were here interred: but, by the demolition of this monastery, "not one bone at this time remains near another, nor one stone almost on another, the tract of this most goodly foundation no where appearing." One side of the walls of king Ethelbert's tower, the gates, houses, and some ruins of the out-buildings, are still standing: but the site of the abbey cannot be traced, and the ground is a cherry orchard. This was the great abbey which some time after changed the name of SS. Peter and Paul for that of St Augustine's. But the remains of our saint were afterwards removed hence into the north porch of the cathedral of Christ's church within the city: and on the 6th of September 1091, leaving in that place some part of the ashes and lesser bones, abbot Wido translated the remainder into the church; where they lay for some time in a strong urn in the wall under the east window. In 1221, the head was put into a rich shrine, ornamented with gold and precious stones; the rest of the bones lay in a marble tomb, enriched with fine carvings and engravings, till the dissolution. (k)

(k) The reason why the burying-place was first built without the city, was an ancient inviolable custom, both of the East and West, never to suffer any one to be interred in towns; which the heathens looked upon as a sacrilege. Among the Romans it was a law of the twelve tables: Intra pomeria ne sepelito neve comburito. It were to be wished that this law had never been transgressed; for by repeated experiments it is demonstrated, that burials multiplied within towns, especially in churches, extremely infect the air, and render the place unwholesome, and sometimes poisonous. On which may be read the late curious dissertations of several very eminent French surgeons. To this day the consecration of churches shews they are not intended for burying-places: whereas both the name cemetery, and the form used in blessing a church-yard, direct this to be the place designed for that purpose. Anciently great personages were buried in the porches, as Constantine the Great was in that of the apostles church at Constantinople, &c. Whence St Chrysostom writes (Hom. 26. in 2 Cor.)

that

Cuthbert, the 11th archbishop, was the first person buried in Christ's church, in 759, since which time it has been the usual burying-place of the archbishops, till the change of religion; for none of the protestant archbishops have hitherto been there interred. In the cathedral of Christ-church were the shrines of St Thomas, St Wilfride, (whose relicks were translated from Rippon by Odo,) St Dunstan, St Elphege, St Anselm, St Odo, St Blaise bishop, St Owen archbishop of Rouen, St Salvius bishop, St Woolgam, St Swithun, &c. Battely (11) and Dr Brown Willis (12) justify the monks of Christ-church from the crimes laid to their charge at the dissolution; but say the riches of their church were their crime. Also the ingenious Mr Wharton, under the name of Antony Harmer, in his Specimen of errors in B. Burnet's history of the Reformation, p. 48. takes notice, that whereas the monks of Christ-church, in Canterbury, and those of Battel-abbey, were principally charged with enormous irregularities at the dissolution of abbeys, their innocence in both places, especially the former, is notorious, from several evident circumstances. Christ-church at Canterbury was rated, at the dissolution, at 2387 l. per an. St Augustine's, in the same place, at 1413 l., according to Dugdale.

(11) Antiquities of Canterbury.

(12) T. I. p. 39.

that emperors esteemed it an honour to be buried near the porches of the apostles. None but the bodies of martyrs and saints were allowed to be placed in churches, till about the ninth century, persons of eminent sanctity were allowed that privilege: and the law being once broken into, and a gap made, the liberty soon became general, though several canons were framed to check the abuse. See l. 1. capitul. cap. 158. and l. 2. c. 48. Also can. 15. causa 13. qu. 2. The council of Rouen in 1581, that of Rheims in 1583, &c. Custom hath now derogated from the law so far, as to authorize the practice: though it were to be wished, that for great cities a decent burying-place were built out of the walls, as that for the great hospital out of Milan, with a chapel in the middle. For the monuments of illustrious persons, anciently cloisters were built near great churches, as those near the cathedral of Vienne in Dauphine, &c. The most finished model is the Campo Santo at Pisa.

ON THE SAME DAY.

St ELEUTHERIUS, Pope, M. He was by birth a Grecian, and deacon of the church of Rome under pope Anicetus. He succeeded St Soter in the pontificate in 176, and governed the church whilst it was beaten with violent storms. Montanus, an ambitious vain man, of Mœsia, on the confines of Phrygia, sought to raise himself among men, by pretending that the Holy Ghost spoke by his mouth, and published forged revelations. His followers afterwards advanced that he was himself the Holy Ghost, the paraclete spirit, sent by Christ, according to his promises, to perfect his law. They seem at first only to have been schismatics and enthusiasts; but soon after added heresy and blasphemy, calling Montanus the Holy Ghost, in the same manner that Christ is God the Son. They affected an excessive rigour, had many fasts, kept three Lents in the year, refused the communion and absolution to persons who had fallen into any sin of impurity, condemned second marriages as adulteries, and taught that it is unlawful to flee from persecution. Priscilla and Maximilla, two women of the town of Pepuza in Phrygia, vaunted their pretended prophecies, and were the oracles of their deluded votaries. The devil uses all sorts of baits to destroy souls. If many perish by those of pleasure, others fall by pride, which is gratified by a love of singularity, and by an affected austerity. Some, who braved the racks and gridirons of the persecutors, and despised the allurements of pleasure, had the misfortune to become the dupes of this wretched enthusiast, and martyrs of the devil. False prophets wear every face, except that of a sincere and docile humility: though their austerity towards themselves usually ends in a short time in some shameful libertinism, when vanity, the main spring of their passions, is either cloyed, or finds nothing to gratify it. In this we see the false rigorists of our times resemble those of former ages. Pharisee-like, they please themselves, and gratify their own pride in an affected severity: by it they also seek to establish themselves in the opinion of others. But humility and obedience are a touchstone which discovers their spirit. Montanus succeeded to the destruction of many souls who by pride or the like passions sought the snare: among others the great Tertullian fell, and not only regarded Montanus as the Paraclete, but so much lost his faith and his reason, as to honour the ground on which his two pretended prophetesses had trod; and to publish in his writings their illusions and dreams concerning the colour of a human soul, and the like absurdities and inconsistencies, as oracles of the eternal truth. The Montanists of Asia, otherwise called Cataphryges and Pepuzenians, sought in the beginning the communion and approbation of the bishop of Rome, to whom they sent letters and presents. A certain pope was prevailed upon, by the good accounts he had received of their severe morals and virtue, to send them letters of communion. But Praxeas, one who had confessed his faith before the persecutors, arriving at Rome, gave him such informations concerning the Pepuzenians and their prophecies, shewing him that he could not admit them without condemning the judgment of his predecessors, that he revoked the letters of peace which he had determined to send, and refused their presents. This is the account which Tertullian himself, a Montanist, gives of the matter (1). Dr Cave and some others think this pope was Eleutherius, and that he approved the very doctrine of the Montanists: which is certainly a mistake. For the pope received from Praxeas only information as to matters of fact. He was only undeceived by him as to persons and facts, and this before any sentence was given. Nay, it seems that the Montanists had not then openly broached their errors in faith, which they for some time artfully disguised. It seems also from the circumstance of the time, that the pope, whom Praxeas undeceived, was Victor, the successor of Eleutherius, and that Eleutherius himself had before rejected the pretended prophets (2).

This good pope had the affliction to see great havock made in his flock by the persecution, especially at Lyons and Vienne, under Marcus Aurelius. But he had, on the other side, the comfort to find the losses richly repaired by the acquisition of new countries to the faith. The light of the gospel had, in the very times of the apostles, crossed the sea into the island of Great Britain: but seems to have been almost choked by the tares of the reigning superstitions, or oppressed by the tumults of wars in the reduction of that valiant people under the Roman yoke: Till God (3) who chose poor fishermen to convert the world, here taught a king to esteem it a greater happiness to become an apostle, and extend his faith in this remote corner of the world than to wear a crown. This was Lucius, a petty king who reigned in part of the island, His Roman name shews, that he was one of those kings whom the Romans honoured with that dignity in remote conquered countries, to be their instruments in holding them in subjection. Lucius sent a solemn embassy to Rome to beg some zealous clergymen of pope Eleutherius, who might instruct his subjects, and celebrate and administer to them the divine mysteries. Our saint received the message with joy, and sent apostolical men who preached Christ in this island with such fruit, that the faith in a very short time passed out of the provinces, which obeyed the Romans, into those northern parts which were inaccessible to their eagles, as Tertullian wrote soon after. (4) Fugatius and Damianus, are said to have been the two principal of these Roman missionaries: the old Welsh chronicle, quoted by Usher, calls them Dwywan and Fagan. They died in or near the diocese of Landaff; and Harpsfield (5) says, there stood in Wales a church dedicated to God under their invocation. Stow, in his annals, says, that in Somersetshire there remaineth a parish church bearing the name of St Deruvian. From this time the faith became very flourishing in Britain, as is mentioned by Origen, Eusebius, St Chrysostom, Theodoret, Gildas,

(1) L. contra Prax., c. 1. (2) See Tillemont, Ceillier on Victor.

(3) See Bede, l. i. ch. 4.
i. i. c. 3.

(4) l. contra Judæos.

(5) Hist.

&c. quoted by Usher, Alford, &c. (a) Florinus, who taught God to be the author of evil, and Blastus, who pretended that the custom of celebrating Easter on the fourteenth day of the moon, which was tolerated in the Orientals, ought to be followed at Rome, were condemned by St Eleutherius, who governed the church fifteen years, and died soon after the emperor Commodus in 192. He was buried on the Salarian road, but his remains have been translated to the Va-

(a) Some late Protestant writers have endeavoured to persuade us that the Britons received the faith from the Orientals, not from Rome. The matter is no otherwise of importance than as an historical fact. But the testimony of all our ancient historians and monuments shews that, as the provinces of the West in general received the faith principally from the preaching of SS. Peter and Paul, and their disciples; so Britain in particular was indebted to the bishops of Rome on that score, and at first kept the feast of Easter according to the tradition of that church. The council of Arles, in 314, confirmed the Roman custom of celebrating Easter: in which synod were present three British bishops, viz. those of London, Colchester and York, witnesses of the practice of this whole church. The same point of discipline was ordained by the council of Nice in 325, and that same year Constantine reckoned the Britons among those who agreed with Rome in the keeping of Easter. After this time, whether by ignorance or by what other means is uncertain, the British, Scots and Irish, admitted an erroneous rule in this point of discipline, by which once in several years they kept Easter on the same day with the Jews: yet did not fall in with the Asiatics, who celebrated that feast always with the Jews on the fourteenth day of the first lunar month, after the vernal equinox, on whatever day of the week it fell, as Eusebius, b. 5. ch. 22. and others testify. Those who did this upon the false and heretical principle, that the Jewish ceremonial laws bound Christians, and were not abolished when fulfilled by the coming of Christ, were heretics: the rest, on account of their separation from the church, and obstinately refusing submission to its decrees and censures, were, after the councils of Arles and Nice, scismatics, and were called Quartodecimans. But the erroneous practice of the Britons differed widely from this of the Orientals, as St Wilfrid demonstrated before Oswi, king of the Northumbrians, as is related by Bede, hist. b. 3. c. 25. For they celebrated Easter always on a Sunday, and on that which fell on or after the fourteenth day: whereas catholics, with the council of Nice, to recede farther from the appearance of observing the legal rites, never kept it on the fourteenth day; but, when that happened to be a Sunday, deferred the celebration of this festival to the Sunday following; to which practice the Scots and Britons at length acceded, as we shall see in the lives of SS. Wilfrid and Cummianus: in the mean time they lay under no censure, differing from the Quartodecimans, who kept Easter always with the Jews on the fourteenth day.

tican church. See St Irenæus, l. 3. c. 3. Eusebius, l. 4. c. 22. l. 5. c. 3. 4. 14. Tillemont, T. 3, p. 60.

St QUADRATUS, Bishop of Athens, C. He was a disciple of the apostles, inherited their spirit and gifts, and by his miracles and labours exceedingly propagated the faith, as Eusebius (1) testifies: who calls him a divine man, and assures us, that he was endued with an eminent gift of prophecy, and was one of those, by whom the Holy Ghost continued to work the same miracles, as by the apostles. St Publius, the immediate successor of St Dionysius the Areopagite, being crowned with martyrdom under Adrian in the year 125, St Quadratus was placed in that episcopal chair. By his qualifications in polite literature, he was esteemed by the heathens as a great ornament to their city, then the seat of the muses: and, by his zeal and piety, he assembled the faithful together, whom the terrors of the persecution had scattered, and rekindled the fire of their faith, which had begun in many to be extinguished, says St Jerom. The emperor Adrian passed the winter at Athens in 124, and was initiated in the mysteries of the goddess Eleusina. (a) The

(1) Hist. b. 3. c. 37.

(a) The Eleusinia were secret rites performed in the night in honour of the goddess Eleusina or Ceres, very ancient at Athens, from whence they were afterwards spread over the whole Roman empire, and beyond its boundaries. Bishop Warburton, by an express dissertation, shews at length, that these mysteries were instituted at Athens to propagate among the great men of the republic the doctrines of a providence governing men's actions and all events, and of a future state of reward and punishment after death, of which these rites contained several remarkable symbols, though blended with idolatrous superstitions. Into these, as into other secret rites of idolatry, wicked men at last introduced the basest crimes of lust and revenge: The Cretans performed these same rites in public, which others held most secret; on which account they were detested by the Athenians, and, in execution of their treachery in bringing to light their hidden mysteries, branded with the odious name of eternal liars. When the emperor Valentinian I. forbade the celebration of all nocturnal rites and sacrifices, Prætextatus, the proconsul of Greece, obtained of him, that the Eleusinian mysteries should be excepted, by this remonstrance, that without them the people would lead ἀβιωτον βίον a comfortless, lifeless life, persecution which then raged, grew much sharper on the occasion of this superstitious festival. (b) St Qua-

life, because their rites were the symbols of a future state; and the life of man is, without the comfort and support of these doctrines, no better than a living death. See also Meursius's dissertation on these rites: and Banier, Mythology Entret. 8. T. 2. p. 44. For a full description of these mysteries of Ceres or Eleusina, which were, beyond all contradiction, the most eminent of all the ancient pagan festivals and religious rites, see the Roman history of Catrou and Rouille, by Bundy, vol. iv. p. 10.

(b) The emperor Adrian published no new edicts against the Christians, as appears from St Melito (apud Eus. l. 4. c. 26.) and Tertullian (Apol. c. 5.) and though he was moved by suspicion, jealousy, and envy, to commit several acts of cruelty, he affected always to appear generous, mild, open, gentle, and affable. His learning was various and extensive, and he was excessively curious and inquisitive; but betrayed a great weakness and folly in the choice of his studies. He pryed into all the magical arts, and was initiated into all the pagan mysteries of Greece. Julian, in his Cæsars, justly banters him for his pragmatical disposition, little thinking that he was drawing his own picture more than that of his predecessor. If he had no particular hatred against the Christians, at least he suffered the magistrates to persecute them at discretion; and judged, with his predecessor Trajan, that their inflexibility in refusing to conform with the established worship of idols, deserved chastisement. He himself condemned to death St Symphorosa, her seven sons, and several others. And Sulpicius Severus, and modern ecclesiastical historians, reckon his the fourth persecution of the church; which St Jerom calls exceeding violent; who adds, that his superstitious initiation in the Eleusinian rites gave occasion to those who hated the faith, to redouble their rage against its professors, but that the apology which Quadratus presented to him, moved him to restore peace to the church. (Hieron. in catal. c. 19.) Adrian accordingly gave a rescript to Minucius Fundanus, proconsul of Asia, in favour of the Christians, though in ambiguous terms, that he might not exasperate the bigoted idolators. The Christian apologists frequently appealed to it, and it is extant in Eusebius (l. 4. c. 19.) and at the end of St Justin's great Apology. Lampridius, a Pagan historian, says, that the emperor Alexander Severus "designed to erect a temple to Christ, and to enrol him among the gods: which Adrian is reported to have formerly intended, who commanded temples without images to be erected in all the cities, which, because they have no gods, are to this day called Adrian's temples. But he (Alexander) was deterred by those, who, consulting the gods, found, that if that project was executed, all would become Christians, and the other temples would be abandoned." However, this mild prince honoured the image of Christ among his private household gods: yet had not the happiness to attain to his faith. The conversion of princes meets often with great obstacles from their interest and various ties, which bind them down to the world.

dratus, thirsting after martyrdom, wrote an apology for our holy faith, which he presented to that emperor some time after the martyrdom of St Publius, and his own exaltation to the episcopal dignity; consequently in 126. St Jerom testifies, that this performance procured him the highest applause, even among the heathens, and that it extinguished a violent persecution. (3) He calls it, A very profitable book, and worthy the apostolical doctrine, &c. Eusebius tells us, that it was an excellent monument of the talents and apostolical faith of the author. On which account its loss is much to be regretted. In a fragment of this work, preserved us by Eusebius, St Quadratus shews the difference between the impostures of magicians, and the true miracles of Christ, and that the former were false, but the latter real, because they were permanent. "But as to the miracles of our Saviour," says he, "they always remained, because they were real and true. The sick cured, and the dead by him raised, did not only appear restored, but they remained so both whilst Christ was on earth, and long after he was departed, so that some of them have come down to our time." See Eusebius hist. b. 3. c. 37. b. 4. ch. 3. b. 5. ch. 19. St Jerom catal. c. 19. & ep. 84. Tillemont, T. 2. p. 253. Grabe, Spicileg. Patr. Præf. in fragm. Quadrati.

St ODUVALD, Abbot, C. This saint was a Scottish nobleman, and governor of the province of Laudon, who, renouncing the world, entered the abbey of Melros. His joy upon this occasion, he expressed by singing those verses of the Psalmist: In the departing of Israel out of Egypt, &c. (1) and, The snare is broken, and we are delivered, &c. (2) During the whole course of his monastic life, he was remarkable for his continual advancement in spiritual fervour, and his gift of tears and constant prayer. His sighs after heaven were crowned with a joyful and happy death, in 698, ten years after St Cuthbert. See Chronica Skonen- sa, & Elphiston. Paslatensis Liber, & Sigebert in Chronico.

(4) Hieron. ep. 84.

(1) Ps. cxliii.

(2) Ps. cxliii.

M A Y XXVII.

St JOHN, POPE, M.

See Anastasius, Theophanes, Marcellinus, &c. collected by Papebroke, Maij. T. 6. Fleury hist. b. 32.

A. D. 526.

P O P E JOHN was by birth a Tuscan. He distinguished himself from his youth in the Roman clergy, of which he became the oracle and the model. He was archdeacon when, after the death of Hormisdas, in 523, he was chosen pope. Theodoric, the Arian king of the Goths, held Italy in subjection, and though endowed with some great qualities, did not divest himself of that disposition to cruelty and jealousy, which is always an ingredient in the character of an ambitious tyrant and a barbarian. It happened that the emperor Justin published an edict, ordering the Arians to deliver up all the churches they were possessed of to the catholic bishops, by whom they were to be consecrated a-new. Theodoric, who was the patron of that sect, took this law very ill; and in revenge threatened that, if it was not repealed in the East, he would not only treat the catholics in his dominions in the same manner, but would fill Rome with blood and slaughter. Being, however, in some awe of the emperor, he resolved to try what he could do by negotiation: and sent the pope at the head of an embassy of five bishops and four senators, of which three had been consuls, to Constantinople on that errand. John used all manner of intreaties to decline such a commission, but was compelled by the king to take it upon him. He was received in the East with the greatest honours possible; and the whole city of Constantinople went out twelve miles to meet him, carrying wax tapers and crosses. The emperor, to use the words of Anastasius, prostrated himself before the most blessed pope, who also relates that the saint entering the city, restored sight to a blind man at the golden gate, who begged that favour of him. The same is mentioned by St Gregory the Great, who adds, that the horse on which he rode, would never after bear any other rider. (1) The joy of that city was universal on this occasion, and the pomp with which the successor of St Peter was received, seemed to surpass the festival of a triumph. Authors vary as to the issue of his embassy: some say, that the pope confirmed Justin in his resolution of taking away the churches from the heretics: but Anastasius tells us, that the pope persuaded Justin to treat the Arians with moderation, and to leave them the churches of which they were possessed; and that the emperor acquiesced. However that be, whilst our saint was in the East, Theodoric caused the great Boetius, who was the pope's most intimate friend, both before and after he was raised to the pontificate, to be apprehended. (a)

(1) Dial 1. 3. c. 2. See Dom Francis Giannotti's diss. on the embassy of pope John to the emperor Justin, among the dissertations of the academy of church history at Bologna, in 1758.

(a) Anitius Manlius Torquatus Severinus BOETIUS, was born at Rome in 470. His father Boetius, who had been thrice consul, died in 490. The son at ten years of age was sent to Athens, where he continued his studies nineteen years: after which returning home, he was declared patrician. He married a lady of great learning, wit and beauty, named Elpis, to whom are ascribed the hymns which are used by the church on the festival of SS. Peter and Paul. (See Boetius, l. 2. de Consol.) In the year 500, king Theodoric, who mostly resided at Spoleto or Ravenna, came to Rome: where he was so charmed with the generosity, disinterestedness, integrity and abilities of Boetius, that he made him master of the palace, and secretary for all public affairs, which two great offices vested him with the whole authority and management of the state. Boetius set himself to govern the people by the most excellent maxims of policy and virtue, which he studied also to instil into the mind of the barbarian king. He taught him, though an Arian, to forbear all persecution, and even to cherish and protect the catholic church: to establish his throne by encouraging and promoting virtue: to study peace, because the glory of a prince consists in the tranquillity and happiness of his subjects: and a king, that is truly the father of his people, ought to be sensible, that it is his first and most essential duty, to improve his kingdom, and to govern well his people: which arduous duty

And no sooner was pope John landed at Ravenna in Italy, but, together with the four senators his colleagues, he was cast into a dark and loathsome dun-

duty calls for his whole application; and for which he cannot find leisure, who too easily busies himself in foreign wars. An ambitious conqueror is the greatest tyrant and scourge of his own people, as well as of other nations. Our philosopher, moreover, persuaded his prince to ease the burdens and taxes of his subjects, because their riches were the prince's strength: to husband well his treasury, a neglect of which bringeth upon a commonwealth contempt abroad, weakness at home, and misery on all sides; it maketh the people hungry, the prince necessitous, contemptible, and impotent; soldiers mutinous, and subjects miserable. He counselled him to entertain in time of peace well-disciplined troops, which would add majesty to his state, and be a terror to his enemies; and in this sense Theodoric used to say, that war was never better made than in time of peace. The wise and Christian statesman taught him never to confer any office or dignity but according to merit, without any regard to favour: also to be severe and vigilant in executing the laws, and in punishing delinquents; for justice is the basis of the throne, and the security of the people; as by it thieves, adulterers, and forgerers, tremble, oppressors of the poor are punished as disturbers of the peace, and enemies to the state, and crimes are banished. He advised him to cherish both the useful and the liberal arts, and to encourage learned men; which conduct never fails to promote wit, prudence, valour, a public spirit, and every means of temporal happiness. He exhorted him to be magnificent in public buildings, and certain manly well-chosen recreations, making them suitable to the majesty of his kingdom.

By these and the like maxims Theodoric governed some years like an excellent prince, as Ennodius draws his portrait in his panegyric. He was assisted in his councils by most virtuous and learned men, among whom were his secretary Cassidorus (who afterward, under king Vitiges, put on the monastic habit in Calabria), Ennodius, Boëtius and others; and whilst the French, Visigoths, and other new nations, which shared among them the spoils of the Roman empire, remained sunk in barbarism, his court was the centre of politeness; under the reign of a Goth, literature was cultivated, and some rays of the golden age of Augustus seemed again to warm Italy, and make it almost forget that it was fallen a prey to barbarians. Of these advantages, the illustrious daughter of Theodoric, Amalasueta, reaped in her education the most happy fruits: but much more happy had Italy been, if the prince himself had not forgot these excellent lessons.

Boëtius, to unbend in some measure, and to improve his mind, always joined with his application to public affairs, the amusement of serious studies, and in his leisure hours made various mathematical instruments. He composed music, of which he sent several pieces to

geon. The tyrant forbid any succour or comfort to be allowed to the prisoners, so that by the hardships of his confinement, and the stench of the place, the

to Clovis, the king of the French; he also made, and sent to Gondobald king of the Burgundians, sun-dials constructed to every different aspect of the sun, hydraulics, and machines which marked exactly the course of the sun, moon, and stars, though without wheels, weight or spring, by the means only of water in a hollow tin globe, which turned perpetually by its own weight. The Burgundians admired how these machines were moved, and marked the hours, and watched them day and night to satisfy themselves that no body ever touched them: and being convinced of the fact, imagined that some divinity resided in them, and moved the finger upon the dial-plate. This gave occasion to a correspondence between that nation and Boëtius, which he made use of to dispose them heartily to embrace the maxims of the gospel.

This great man was a long time the oracle of his prince, and the idol of the people; and the highest honours in the state were not thought adequate to his virtue and abilities. He was thrice consul, and for a singular distinction of his merits, in 510, without a colleague. In 522, his two sons were appointed consuls in their nonage, a privilege which had only been granted to the sons of emperors. He confesseth, that if joy can be derived from frail honours of the world, he had reason enough to rejoice on that day; when he saw his two sons carried in pomp through the city in a triumphal car, accompanied with the whole senate, and an infinite concourse of people, and himself was seated in the great court of the circus between his two sons consuls, receiving there the congratulations of the king, and all the people. On which day, after his harangue to the king in the senate-house, he was presented with a crown, and saluted king of eloquence. After the death of Elpis, he took to wife Rusticiana, the daughter of Symmachus, the most accomplished of all the Roman ladies. But such is the inconstancy of human things, that the highest honours often only raise a man that his fall may be the greater. Neither friends, dignities, nor riches, could protect Boëtius from the frowns of fortune; under which, however, his virtue, which was the sole cause of his sufferings, triumphed with the greater lustre.

Happy and glorious had Theodoric reigned, so long as he followed the wise counsels of Boëtius. But seeing himself firmly established on the throne, he abandoned himself to his disposition to tyranny, and growing old, became melancholy, jealous, and mistrustful of every body that was about his person, making two avicious and perfidious Goths, called Conigast and Irigilla, the depositaries of his whole authority and confidence. These ministers, to gratify their insatiable covetousness, began to load the people with excessive taxes, which the king had till then forborn. In a great scarcity, they obliged the people to sell their corn into the king's granaries, and for the soldiery, almost at no price; they upon groundless suspicions good pope died at Ravenna on the 27th of May, 526, soon after the cruel execution of Boëtius, having sat two years and nine months. His body was conveyed removed Albinus and Paulinus, two of the most illustrious senators, and others. Boëtius undertook to lay before the king in private the tears of his provinces, which had formerly so often softened his heart to compassion, and opened his hands to liberality: but finding no redress, all avenues being obstructed by harpies and flatterers, he publicly addressed him on these heads in the full senate-house. He professed the most steady allegiance and obedience to him in his own name, and in that of the other senators; declaring that they revered his royal authority, in whatever hands it was lodged, and left to him the distribution of his favours, more free than are the rays of the sun. They craved, however, the liberty, which had ever been the most precious inheritance of that empire, that they might lay open their grievances, and inform him, that base flatterers abused his confidence to the excessive oppression of his subjects; insomuch that to be born rich was to become a prey, and that the very stones related the oppressions and moans of the people. He reminded him of those noble words which they had formerly often heard from his mouth, that "the flock may be shorn, but not slayed; and that there is no tribute comparable to the precious commodities and advantages which a prince derived from the love of his subjects." He intreated him to reassume that spirit which made him reign in their hearts as well as in the provinces: to listen to those whose loyalty had been approved by the successes of his prosperous reign: to bear his subjects in his bosom, not to trample them under his feet, and to remember that kings are given by heaven for the happiness of the people: not to govern by the utmost exertion and extent of their power, but by the rule of their obligations; to be the fathers of children, not masters of slaves, and to reign over men, not as tyrants at will, but so that the laws themselves only govern. He conjured him to open his eyes, and see the miseries of the provinces bewailing the concussions which they suffered, whilst they were obliged to satisfy with their sweat and blood the avarice of some particular persons, who yet were as greedy as fire, and as insatiable as the abyss. The issue of this generous speech was, that it was deemed by the king an act of rebellion, and through his artifices Boëtius was banished by a decree of the mercenary ungrateful senate. After which sentence, by an order of the king, he and his father-in-law Symmachus were carried prisoners to the strong fortress of Pavia in 523. Trigilla and Conigast unjustly accused them of high treason, and Symmachus was beheaded. Boëtius was also put to death in a castle, situated in a desert place, about the midway from Pavia to Rome. He is said to have been first tortured by means of a wheel, to which was fastened a cord, wherewith his head was bound; and by the turning of the wheel, was squeezed with such violence that his eyes flew out. Then he was laid on a beam, and beaten with clubs, by two executioners, upon to Rome, and buried in the Vatican church. The two letters which bear his name are supposititious, as appears from their very dates, &c.
remove

upon all the different parts of his body from his neck down to his feet; and being still alive, he was beheaded, or rather his head was clove asunder, in the 54th year of his age, on the 23d of October, 525. Boëtius is proved innocent of the conspiracy of which he was suspected with the good pope, in his new life prefixed to the third and last French translation of his book, Consolation de la Philosophie, Traduction Nouvelle, 12mo. chez Gogue. 1771. The catholics carried off his body, and some time after buried it at Pavia. Two hundred years after king Luitprand caused it to be removed into the church of St Austin, where he honoured it with a stately mausoleum: and the emperor Otho III. erected another to his memory with magnificent inscriptions. His estates were confiscated by Theodoric, but after his death restored by his daughter Amalasunta to his widow, who survived till Belisarius had expelled the Goths; at which time he broke down all the statues of Theodoric in Italy, though his stately sepulchral monument still remains near Ravenna, the admiration of travellers. The tyrant, having cut off several other senators, fell into a deep melancholy, and was distracted with jealousies, fears and remorse. About three months after the death of the holy pope John, when the head of a great fish was served at table, he imagined it to be the head of Symmachus, demanding vengeance against him; nor was any one able to calm his apprehensions in this phrensy, he was carried raging to his bed, and he died miserably a few days after.

The cause of the death of Boëtius seems to have been complicated in part with that of religion, as was the death of pope John, whom he zealously seconded in defending the faith. The constancy with which he embraced his barbarous death, calling it a gift of God, and forbidding any one to weep at it, and his great zeal and piety, have rendered his memory dear to all good men. He fell a martyr of the liberty of the people, and of the dignity of the Roman senate, and probably, in part, of the catholic faith, of which he was, with pope John, the chief support. An ancient author published by Mabillon (Iter. Ital. p. 22.) affirms him to have been impeached for a correspondence with the emperor Justin. But the silence of other writers persuades us, that this was a slander of his enemies.

Boëtius translated from the Greek the works of Euclid, Ptolemy, Plato, Aristotle, Archimedes, &c. and with so much propriety, perspicuity, and purity of language, that Cassiodorus (L. i. ep. 45.) prefers his versions to the originals themselves. He was so much taken with the close reasoning and method of Aristotle, that he first translated several of his treatises into Latin. The works of our author are chiefly philosophical; with five theological tracts, principally written against the Nestorian and Eutychian heresies, and almost all

When we see wicked men prosper, and saints die in dungeons we are far from doubting of providence; we are strengthened in the assured belief, that God, who has stamped the marks of infinite wisdom and goodness on all his works, has appointed a just retribution in the world to come. And faith reveals to us clearly this important secret. We at present see only one end of the chain in the conduct of providence towards men: many links in it are now concealed from our eyes. Let us wait a little, and we shall see in eternity God's goodness abundantly justified. Who does not envy the happiness of a martyr in his dungeon, when he beholds the inward joy, peace, and sentiments of charity with which he closes his eyes to this world? and much more when he contemplates in spirit the glory

all dedicated to the deacon John, afterward pope and martyr. His Profession of Faith is one of the most methodical pieces of ecclesiastical antiquity, justly styled by his editor, a golden book. But his master-piece are the five books On the Consolation of Philosophy, which he wrote without the help of any book, during his long confinement at Pavia, under frequent interrogatories, and the daily expectation of tortures and death. He names not Christ in this whole work, but he expresses the sentiments of a perfect Christian, in a dialogue with the increased wisdom. He establishes a divine providence from reason, and speaks of the torments of the world to come. The versification in this work is not equal to the prose, though the thoughts are every where sublime. It shews Boëtius to have been one of the finest geniuses that the world has ever produced. He formed the most just and noble conceptions of things with an astonishing ease: and in the most abstract and difficult matters in metaphysics, theology, and every other subject. So elegant and so finished is this original piece, that few productions of the most flourishing ages of the Latin eloquence are superior to it in purity of style, in truth and loftiness of thought, or in sweetness of expression. He says, that the only cause of his disgrace was a desire of preserving the honour of the senate. (De Consol. Phil. c. 1) In his juvenile works his style is more rugged. See his life by Abbé Gervaise, at Paris, in 17 5, and by Ceillier, T. 15. p. 503. Also the life of Boëtius by Richard Graham Viscount Preston, prefixed to the English translation of his book, On the Consolation of Philosophy, published with notes by that noble lord. Papebroke honours Severinus Boëtius with the title of saint, joins his life with that of pope John, and mentions the calendars of Ferrarius and of certain churches in Italy, in which his name is inserted on the 23d of October, on which he is commemorated in the divine office in St Peter's church at Pavia. See Papebroke, T. 6. Maij. p. 707.

with which the soul of the saint is conducted by angels, like Lazarus, to the abodes of immortal bliss? On the contrary, the wicked tyrant cannot think himself safe upon his throne, and amidst his armies: but sits, like Damocles, under the terrible sword, in the midst of his enjoyments, in the dreary expectation, every moment, of perishing. At best, his treacherous pleasures are a wretched exchange for the true joy and peace of virtue: nor can he fly from the torment of his own conscience, or the stench of his guilt. How dreadfully are his horrors increased upon the approach of death! And how will he to all eternity condemn his extravagant folly, unless, by sincere repentance, he shall have prevented everlasting woes!

St BEDE, CONFESSOR, FATHER OF THE CHURCH

From the short account he has given of himself in the last chapter of his ecclesiastical history: his disciple Cuthbert's relation of his death: his two short anonymous lives, extant, one in Capgrave, the other quoted by F. Maithew. Also from Simon of Durham, Hist. Dunelm. c. 14, 15. & l. de Pontif. Eborac. in manuscript. Cotton. Malmesb. de Reg. Angl. l. 2. c. 4. Matt. of West. ad an. 734. See Mabillon, sec. 3. Ben. p. 1. p. 539. Bulteau, T. 2. p. 316. Cave, Hist. lit. T. 1. Ed. noviss. Ceillier, T. 18. p. 1. Tanner, Bibl. Script. Britan. p. 86. Biographia Brit. T. 1. V. Bede; and Smith in app. after Bede's Eccl. Hist. p. 792.

A. D. 735.

THE celebrated Dom Mabillon, (1) mentioning Bede as a most illustrious instance of learning in the monastic institute, says: "Who ever applied himself to the study of every branch of literature, and also to the teaching of others, more than Bede? Yet, who was more closely united to heaven by the exercises of piety and religion? To see him pray, says an ancient writer, one would have thought he left himself no time to study; and, when we look at his books, we admire he could have found time to do any thing else but write." Camden calls him "the singular and shining light," and

(1) Tr. des Etudes Monast. T. 1. p. 111. ed Par. 1692.

Leland, "the chiefest and brightest ornament of the English nation, most worthy, if any one ever was, of immortal fame." William of Malmesbury tells us, that it is easier to admire him in thought than to do him justice in expression. Venerable Bede, called by the ancients Bedan, (who is not to be confounded with a monk of Lindisfarne of the same name (2) but older), was born in 673, as Mabillon demonstrates from his own writings, in a village which soon after his birth became part of the estate of the new neighbouring monastery of Jarrow, but was gained upon by the sea before the time of Simeon of Durham. St Bennet Biscop founded the abbey of St Peter's at Weremouth, near the mouth of the Were, in 674, and that of St Paul's at Girwum, now Jarrow, in 680, on the banks of the river Tine, below the Capra-caput, still called Goat's-head, or Gateshead, opposite to Newcastle. Such an harmony subsisted between the two houses that they were often governed by the same abbot, and called the same monastery of SS. Peter and Paul. St Bennet was a man of extraordinary learning and piety, and enriched these monasteries with a large and curious library which he had collected at Rome, and in other foreign parts. To his care Bede was committed at seven years of age, but was afterward removed to Jarrow, where he prosecuted his studies under the direction of the abbot Coelfrid, who had been St Bennet's fellow-traveller. Among other able masters, under whom he made great progress, he names Trumbert, a monk of Jarrow, who had formerly been a disciple of St Chad, bishop, first of York, afterward of Litchfield, who had established a great school in his monastery of Lestingan in Yorkshire. The church music, or chant, Bede learned of John, formerly precentor of St Peter's on the Vatican, and abbot of St Martin's at Rome, whom pope Agatho had sent over to England with St Bennet Biscop. The Greek language our saint must have learned of Theodorus archbishop of Canterbury, and the abbot Adrian, by whose instruction that language became as familiar to several of their English scholars as their native tongue. For an instance of which Bede mentions Tobias, bishop of Rochester. How great a master Bede was of that language appears from his Ars Metrica, and other works. His poem on St Cuthbert and other performances shew him to have been a good poet for the age wherein he lived. But his comments on the holy scriptures, and his sermons, prove that the meditation on the word of God, and the writings of the holy fathers, chiefly engrossed his time and attention.

(2) Vlt. S. Cuthbert. c. 37. See Mabil. Anal. T. 4. p. 521. 522.

His great piety and endowments supplying the defect of age, by the order of his abbot Ceolfiud, he was ordained deacon in 691, at nineteen years of age by St John of Beverley, who was at that time bishop of Hexham, in which diocese Jarrow was situated, there being then no episcopal see at Durham. From this time he continued his studies till at thirty years of age, in 702, he was ordained priest by the same St John who was made bishop of Hexham in 685, and bishop of York in 704. In king Alfred's version Bede is styled Mass-Priest, because it was his employment to sing every day the conventual mass. He tells us, that the holy abbot and founder, St Bennet Biscop, like the rest of the brethren, used to winnow the corn, and thresh it, to give milk to the lambs and calves, and to work in the bakehouse, garden, and kitchen. Bede must have sometimes had a share in such employments, and he was always cheerful, obedient, and indefatigable. But his studies and writing, with assiduous meditation and prayer, must have chiefly employed him. He often copied books. From the time that he was promoted to priestly Orders he began to compose books; and he had a great school, in which he brought up many eminent and holy scholars, and instructed his fellow monks, who amounted to the number of six hundred. Bede tells us of himself that he applied himself wholly to the meditation of the holy scriptures, and amidst the observance of regular discipline, and the daily care of singing in the church, it was his delight to be always employed either in learning, teaching, or writing. He says that, from the time of his being made priest to the 59th year of his age, when he wrote this, he had compiled several books for his own use, and that of others, gathering them out of the works of the venerable fathers, or adding new comments, according to their sense and interpretation (a). He gives a list of

(a) Bede wrote his Church History of the English in the year 731, the 59th of his age, at the request of Ceolwulph (to whom it was dedicated) a very learned and pious king of the Northumbrians, who three years after Bede's death resigned his kingdom to his son Edbert, and became a monk at Lindisfarne, where he died in 740. Milton and some others complain of omissions of dates and civil transactions. But Bede's undertaking was only a history of the English church; a work suitable to his profession and piety. He speaks sparingly of the British churches, because they fell not directly under his plan. If he relates many visions and miracles, he usually names his vouchers. The best editions of this history are those of Abr. Wheloc with notes, at Cambridge, in 1644: of Peter Fr. Chiffet, a Jesuit, with notes, at Paris in 1681, and especially of Dr John Smith, at Cambridge, in 1722, in folio, with Bede's other historical works, as his Chronicle, or on the six ages of the world; his Lives of St Cuthbert and St Felix, his Letters to archbishop Egbert, his book on the Holy Places, (p. 315.) his Genuine Martyrology, (p. 327.) first published without the posterior additions of Florus, monk of St Tron's and others, by the Bollandists (Mart. T. 2. Proleg.) Bede's Lives of the five first abbots of Weremouth (St Bennet Biscop, St Ceolfrid, Estervin, Sigefrid and Witbert) is accurately published by Sir James Ware, at Dublin, in 1664, and by Henry Wharton, at London, in 1693. The life of St Cuthbert he wrote both in prose and in verse: that of St Felix he only translated into prose from the poems of St Paulinus. Several lives published among Bede's works belong to other authors: that of St Gregory the Great, to Paul the deacon; those of SS, Columban, Attalus, Eustatius, Bertulfus and Fara, to Jonas the disciple of St Columban; that of St Vedastus to an anonymous Frenchman; that of St Patrick to Probus. The other works of Bede are comments on the scripture, and several homilies or sermons: others treat on poesy, grammar, rhetoric, astronomy, music, the art of notation or of memory, the calendar, on Easter or the Equinox, &c. His book On the Holy Places is an abridgment of Adamnan, &c. His hymns and epigrams are lost. The works of Bede are printed at Paris, in 1499, and 1545, in three tomes; and at Basil, in 1563, in eight tomes: at Cologne, in 1612, and 1688. See Fabricius Bibl. Lat. 254. Mabillon, Sæc. Ben. iii. in Elogio Historico de Beda ejusque Scriptis: Cave, Hist. Litter. T. 1. p. 612. Tanner, Bibl. Brit. p. 86, and Boston Buriens, p. 29. ap. Tan. in Præf. Cave calls it a disgrace to our nation, that no accurate or complete edition of Bede's work has been set forth, especially as many genuine valuable writings of this father forty-five different works which he had then composed, of which thirty, and many of those are divided into several books, consist of comments on the Old and New Testament. He wrote several other works after this. All the sciences and every branch of literature were handled by him; natural philosophy, the philosophical principles of Aristotle, astronomy, arithmetic, the calendar, grammar, ecclesiastical history, and the

are found in manuscripts, which have never been published: of which catalogues are given by Cave and Tanner. The former has published Bede's Prologue to the Canonical Epistles, (p. 614.) pretending that the primacy of St Peter seems to have been unknown to the author. Bede indeed thinks the epistle of St James may have been placed first, because the gospel began to be preached at Jerusalem, and because St James wrote his epistle before St Peter. But see this prologue more correctly given by Trombelli, a canon regular of St Saviour, at Bologna, in 1755. (Beda, Claudii Taurinensis aliorumque Veterum Patrum Opuscula.) This piece is published by the warmest abettors of St Peter's supremacy; so far are they from industriously suppressing it, as Cave insinuates. Neither can any one form from it an objection to that article, which no one more manifestly establishes than Bede, in many parts of his works. Nor can Bede's religion, as to any other points of controversy in faith, be ambiguous to any one who is the least conversant in his writings, especially as to the doctrine of praying for the dead, invoking saints, venerating their relics, and holy images, &c. to all which practices he ascribes miracles, &c. He proves that God in the decalogue forbade only idols, not all holy images, for he commanded himself the brazen serpent, &c. (l. De Templo Solom. c. 19. T. 8. p. 40.) His Church History, which is in every one's hands, may suffice alone to speak for him. See him also on praying for the dead (Hom. 2. T. 5. Anecd. Martenne, p. 239. &c.) It may seem worth notice that (l. De Nat. Rerum. p. 36. Op. T. 2. p. 37.) he teaches the world and the earth to be round. The protestants would be unwilling to stand by his verdict or testimony of the church's faith; though they have not refused him the just tribute of praise. Melancthon (de corrigendis studiis) confesses venerable Bede to have been a person singularly skilled in Greek and Latin; also in mathematics, philosophy and sacred literature. Bishop Tanner (p. 86) gives this character of him: "He was a prodigy of learning in an unlearned age, whose erudition we can never cease admiring. If we think that he sometimes failed in his judgment, or by credulity, when we take a view of all his writings together, we shall confess that he alone is a library and a treasure of all the arts." The geography of Bede, even in his descriptions of foreign countries, is incomparably exact, though he never travelled abroad: which shews how careful he was in procuring the best informations, which he also discovers in his preface to his history, where he speaks of the sources of his intelligence.

lives of the saints: though works of piety make up the bulk of his writings. The ornaments of rhetoric were not his study; but perspicuity, (the first qualification in writing) an unaffected honesty and simplicity, and an affecting spirit of sincere piety, and goodness of heart and charity, run through all his compositions, and cannot fail to please. An honest candour and love of truth are so visibly the characteristics of his historical works, that if some austere critics have suspected him sometimes of credulity, no man ever called in question his sincerity. If on the scriptures he often abridged or reduced to a methodical order the comments of St Austin, St Ambrose, St Jerom, St Basil, and other fathers, this he did, not out of sloth, or want of genius, (as some later writers have done), but that he might stick closer to tradition in interpreting the sacred oracles: and in what he found not done by other eminent fathers, he still followed their rules, lest he should, in the least tittle, deviate from tradition. In the original comments which he wrote, he seems, in the opinion of good judges, not inferior in solidity and judgment to his ablest masters among the fathers. John Bale, the apostate Carmelite friar, and the sworn enemy of the monks and fathers, who was bishop of Ossory under Edward VI. and died canon of Canterbury under queen Elizabeth, could not refuse Bede the highest encomiums, and affirms, that he certainly surpassed Gregory the Great in eloquence and copiousness of style, and that there is scarce any thing in all antiquity worthy to be read, which is not found in Bede. Dr John Pitts (3) advances, that Europe scarce ever produced a greater scholar; and that, even whilst he was living, his writings were of so great authority, that a council ordered them to be publicly read in the churches. Folchard, a very learned monk of Christ-church, in Canterbury, and abbot of Thorney, in the days of St Edward the Confessor, and the Conqueror, originally from Sithiu, in his life of St John of Beverley, quoted by Leland, says of Bede: "It is amazing how this great man became so perfect in all the branches of those sciences to which he applied himself, whereby he conquered all difficulties, and brought those of his own nation to form right notions: so that, from the rude and boorish manners of their ancestors, they began to be exceedingly civilized and polite, through their desire of learning, of which he not only taught them the grounds, whilst living, but in his works left them a kind of Encyclopædia (or universal library) for the instruction of youth after his decease." Fuller writes of him: "He expounded almost all the Bible, translated the Psalms and New Testament into English, and lived a comment on those words of the apostle: shining as a light in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation." What we most admire in Bede is the piety with which he pursued and sanctified his studies, and the use which he made of them. What he says of St Chad, was a transcript of his own life, that he studied the holy scriptures so as to meditate assiduously on the mysteries of faith, and the maxims and rules of piety, treasuring up in his heart the most perfect sentiments of divine love, humility, and all virtues, and diligently copying them in his whole conduct. Hence, his life was a model of devotion, obedience, humility, simplicity, charity, and penance. He declined the abbatial dignity, which was pressed upon him. Malmesbury gives us a letter of pope Sergius (4), by which, with many honourable expressions, he was invited to Rome, that pope desiring to see and consult him, in certain matters of the greatest importance. This must have happened about the time that he was ordained priest. Bede, out of modesty, suppressed this circumstance. What hindered his journey thither, we know not; but we have his word for it that he lived, from his childhood, in his monastery, without travelling abroad, that is, without taking any considerable journey. His reputation drew to him many visits from all the greatest men in Britain, particularly from the pious king Ceolwulph. Ecgbright, or Egberct, brother to Eadbyrht, king of Northumberland, who was consecrated archbishop of York in 734, had been Bede's scholar. At his pressing invitation our saint went to York, and taught there some months, but excused himself from leaving his monastery the following year. (5) This school, set up at York, became very flourishing, and Alcuin, one of its greatest ornaments, is said to have been himself a scholar of Bede. Our saint died soon after Ecgbright's accession to the see of York; but lived long enough to write him a letter of advice upon his advancement. Herein he puts him in mind that it was a most essential part of his duty to place every where able and learned priests, to labour strenuously himself in feeding his flock, in correcting all vice, and endeavouring to convert all sinners, and to take care that every one knew the Lord's Prayer, and the Creed, and was thoroughly instructed in the articles of our holy religion. He gives it as an important piece of advice, that all among the laity whose lives are pure (or free from vice) communicate every Sunday, and on the festivals of the apostles and martyrs, as he says Ecgbright had seen practised at Rome: but Bede requires that married persons prepare themselves by continence to receive the holy communion, (6) which was formerly a precept repeated in several councils; but is now by disuse looked upon as no more than a counsel, but a counsel which St Charles Borromeo recommends to be inculcated. Bede died within the compass of a year after he had wrote this letter. Cuthbert, called also Antony, one of his scholars, to whom the saint dedicated his book, De Arte metrica, wrote to one Cuthwin, a monk who had formerly been his school-fellow under Bede, an account of the death of their dear master. This Cuthbert was afterward abbot of Jarrow, in which dignity he succeeded Huethbert, called also Eusebius, another scholar of Bede.

(3) De Script. Angl.

(4) L. I. de Reg. c. 3.

The letter of Cuthbert (7) deserves to have a place in the life of Bede, though it is here something abridged.

(5) Bed. ep. Ecgbright, ap. Smith, p. 306.

(6) Ib. p. 311.

(7) Ap. Simon. Dunelm. Hist. Dunelm. l. 1, c. 15. & ap. Smith. p. 792.

“ To his most beloved in Christ, and fellow-reader Cuthwin, his school-fellow Cuthbert wishes eternal salvation in our Lord. Your small present was very acceptable, and your letter gave me much satisfaction, wherein I found what I greatly desired, that masses and prayers are diligently said by you for Bede, the beloved of God, our late father and master. For the love I bear him, I send you in few words an account of the manner in which he departed this world, understanding it is what you desire. He began to be much troubled with a shortness of breath about two weeks before Easter, yet without pain : Thus he lived cheerful and rejoicing, giving thanks to Almighty God every day and night, nay every hour, till the day of our Lord’s Ascension, which was the 26th of May. He daily read lessons to us his scholars : the rest of the day he spent in singing psalms : he also passed all the night awake in joy and thanksgiving, only when he was interrupted by a short slumber ; but awaking he repeated his accustomed exercises, and ceased not to give thanks to God, with his hands expanded. O truly happy man : He sung that sentence of St Paul : It is a dreadful thing to fall into the hands of the living God ; and much more out of holy writ. Being well skilled in English verses he recited some things in our tongue. He said in English : No man is so wise to consider what good or evil he has done, before the necessary departure : that is, to examine the state of his soul sufficiently before his death. He also sung anthems, according to his and our custom ; one of which is : O glorious King, Lord of Hosts, who triumphing this day didst ascend above all the heavens, leave us not orphans ; but send down the Father’s Spirit of truth upon us : Alleluia. When he came to that word : leave us not, he burst into tears, and wept much : and an hour after he began to repeat the same anthem he had commenced, and we hearing it, grieved with him. By turns we read, and by turns we wept ; nay, we always wept even when we read. In such joy we passed the fifty days, and he rejoiced much, and gave God thanks because he deserved to be so infirm. He often repeated that, God scourgeth every son whom he receiveth; and much more out of the scripture: also that sentence of St Ambrose: 'I have not lived so as to be ashamed to live among you: nor am I afraid to die, because we have a good God.' During these days, besides the daily lessons he gave, and the singing of psalms, he composed two works for the benefit of the church: the one was, a translation of St John's gospel into English, as far as those words: But what are these among so many? the other, some collection out of St Isidore's book of notes: for he said: I will not have my scholars read a falsehood after my death, and labour without advantage. On Tuesday before the Ascension he began to be much worse in his breathing: and a small swelling appeared in his feet. But he passed all that day pleasantly, and dictated in school, saying now and then: Go on quickly: I know not how long I shall hold out, and whether my Maker will soon take me away. To us he seemed very well to know the time of his departure. He spent the night awake in thanksgiving. On Wednesday morning he ordered us to write speedily what he had begun. After this, we made the procession, according to the custom of that day, (b) walking with the relicks of the saints till the third hour (or nine o'clock in the morning); then one of us said to him: Most dear master, there is still one chapter wanting. Do you think it troublesome to be asked any more questions: He answered: It is no trouble. Take your pen, and write fast. He did so. But at the ninth hour (three in the afternoon) he said to me: Run quickly; and bring all the priests of the monastery to me. When they came, he distributed to them some pepper-corns, little cloths or handkerchiefs, and incense, which he had in a little box, (c) intreating every one that they would carefully

(b) Usque ad tertiam horam, ambulavimus deinde cum reliquiis sanctorum, ut consuetudo diei illius posebat. p. 793. ed Smith. This was the procession of the Rogations, on the eve of Ascension-day.

(c) Piperem, oraria et incensa. The incense was used to burn at high mass, as Gemmulus, a deacon of Rome, mentions (ep. ad S. Bonifac. inter ep. Bonif. 149.) who sent the like present to St Boniface. Oraria means little cloths to wipe the mouth, as Vossius shews. (c. 3. de celebrate masses, and say prayers for him ; which they readily promised to do. They all wept at his telling them, they should no more see his face in this world : but rejoiced to hear him say : It is now time for me to return to Him who made me, and gave me a being, when I was nothing. I have lived a long time : my merciful Judge most graciously foresaw and ordered the course of my life for me. The time of my dissolution draws near. I desire to be dissolved, and to be with Christ. Yes : my soul desires to see Christ my king in his beauty. Many other things he spoke to our edification, and spent the rest of the day in joy till the evening. The above-mentioned young scholar, whose name was Wilberth, said to him : Dear master, there is still one sentence that is not written. He answered : Write quickly. The young man said : It is now done. He replied : You have well said : it is at an end : all is finished. Hold my head, that I may have the pleasure to sit, looking towards my little oratory where I used to pray ; that whilst I am sitting I may call upon my heavenly Father, and on the pavement of his little place sing, Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost. Thus he prayed on the floor, and when he had named the Holy Ghost, he breathed out his soul. All declared that they had never seen any one die with such great devotion and tranquillity : for so long as his soul was in his body, he never ceased, with his hands expanded, to give thanks and praise to God, repeating, Glory be to the Father, &c. with other spiritual acts. I have many other things I could relate of him : and I have a thought of writing more amply on this subject, &c."

de vitis serm. c. 31.) Bede, by these little presents, desired to give tokens of mutual charity, and memorials to put others in mind to remember him in the divine office, as Mabillon and Smith observe. Monks were then allowed, with the abbot's tacit consent, to leave such little tokens or memorials, as is clear from St Bennet's rule. St Lullus sent to the abbess Kaneboda, a present of pepper, incense, and cinnamon. The epistles of St Boniface and others, furnish several like instances. Such little tokens were intended to put persons in mind to pray for one another. Fortunatus, returning thanks for such a present of herbs, chesnuts, and plumbs, says : Munere in angusto cerni ur amphi amor, l. 11. epigr. 23. See Mabillon, loco cit. § 8. De Xenicis. Smith, loc. cit.

Ranulph Higden (8) relates the manner of his holy departure : " After teaching all day, it was his custom to watch much in the nights. Finding, by the swelling of his feet, that death approached, he received extreme-unction, and then the Viaticum, on the Tuesday before the Ascension of the Lord, and gave the kiss of peace to all his brethren, imploring their pious remembrance after his death. On the feast of the Ascension, lying on sackcloth spread on the floor, he invited the grace of the Holy Ghost . . . and continued in praise and thanksgiving, in which he breathed forth his holy soul." St Bede died in the year 735, of his age sixty-two, (d) on Wednesday-evening, the 26th of May, after the first Vespers of our Lord's Ascension: whence many authors say he died on the feast of the Ascension; for our Saxon ancestors reckoned festivals from the first Vespers. Thus, from repeating the divine praises here, in the most pure and profound sentiments of compunction, humility, zeal, and love, he passed, as it were, without intermission, to sing eternally the same praises, with affections at once infinitely dilated with inexpressible holy joy, ardour, and love, in the glorious choirs of the blessed, and in the beatific contemplation of God, whom he praised and loved. His feast was kept in England, in some places, on the 26th of May, with a commemoration only in the office of St Austin: in others, it was deferred to the 27th, on which it occurs in the Roman martyrology. In the constitution of John Alcock, bishop of Ely, for the festivals of his diocese, printed in 1498, by Pynson, Bede's feast is ordered to be kept with an office on the 13th of March, the day of his death being taken up by the office of St Austin. Certain Congregations of the Benedictin Order have long kept his office on the 29th of October, perhaps on account of some translation. On the same day it is celebrated at present in England, and, by a special privilege, the office is said by all English priests who live in foreign countries, by an indult or grant of pope Benedict XIV. given in 1754: which grant, at least with regard to those clergymen or regulars who are in England, was interpreted at Rome to imply a precept.

(8) Polychron. l. 5. ad an. 732.

(d) This calculation of Mabillon agrees with the saint's writings and History, and with the Paschal Cycle of that year; though some make him to have lived only fifty nine years; and the life of Alcuin seems to say that he died in his 90th year: consequently, that he lived 30 years after he had wrote his Church History: which system is adopted by bishop Tanner, who says he died in 762, ninety years old. Bibl. Britan. p. 92.

Alcuin (9) having extolled the learning and virtues of this holy doctor, says, that his sanctity was attested by the voice of heaven after his death: for a sick man was freed from a fever upon the spot, by touching his relicks. St Lullus, archbishop of Mentz, wrote to his scholar Cuthbert, then abbot of Weremouth and Jarrow, to beg a copy of Bede's works, and sent him a cloak for his own use, and a silk vest to cover the shrine of this great servant of God. At that time a vest was an usual present even to kings. Bede was buried in St Paul's church at Jarrow, where a porch on the north side bore his name. In 1020, his sacred remains were conveyed to Durham, and laid in a bag and wooden trunk, in the shrine of St Cuthbert, as Simeon of Durham relates. In 1155, they were taken up by Hugh, bishop of Durham, and inclosed in a rich shrine of curious workmanship, adorned with gold, silver, and jewels, as we learn from the appendix to the history of Durham, compiled by Simeon of Durham, who wrote from the memoirs of Turgot, the learned prior of Durham, in the reign of Edward the Confessor, made archbishop of St Andrew's in the reign of the Conqueror, whose declared enemy he was. Hence Turgot's history has been by some ascribed to him. At the change of religion in England, the shrines of the saints were plundered by the royal commissioness, but these were anticipated by private robbers in many places. At the same time, the relicks were scattered or publicly burnt. This latter part of the commission, which was rigorously executed near the court, and in the southern provinces, was not much regarded in the more remote northern counties, where they were usually interred in the churches where their shrines were kept, as we see in St Cuthbert's, St John of Beverley's, &c. Speed, in his Theatre of Britain, says his marble monument subsisted, when he wrote, in our Lady's chapel in the western part of the church of Durham. Sir George Wheeler, who died prebendary of Durham, and was a great admirer of Bede, according to his will, is buried within the cathedral, near the foot of Bede's tomb, and has an inscription, whereas none is now found over St Bede's. Mr Smith has given a type of the remains which are now standing (10), and another of the altar of St Cuthbert and St Bede, delineated from the paintings of the eastern window. (11) Nevertheless, the monks of Glastenbury laid claim to St Bede's relicks, or a portion of them. (12) Boniface calls St Bede the lamp of the English church: St Lullus, Alcuin, and other writers from the time of his death, exceedingly extol his learning and sanctity. By Lanfranc and many others he is styled the doctor and father of the English. Trithemius imagined that the title of venerable was conferred on him in his lifetime. But Mabillon shews, from the silence of all former writers, that it was begun to be given him, out of a peculiar respect, only in the ninth age, when it was used by Amalarius, Jonas, Usuard, &c. (13) He was styled Saint, and placed in foreign martyrologies long before that time, by Hincmar, Notker, (14) in the litany of St Gall's, &c. Rabanus Maurus mentions an altar at Fulde, of which Bede was titular saint. The second council of Aix la Chapelle, in 836, calls him, "The venerable, and in the modern times, admirable doctor," &c.

(9) Alcuin. Carm. de Pontif. & Sanct. Eccl. Eborac. v. 1305.

It was the happiness of venerable Bede, that, receiving his education under the direction of saints, by their

(10) App. ad Hist. Bedæ. p. 805.

(11) Frontispiece, ib.

(12) See Monast. Angl. T. 1. and John of Glasenb. (13) Mab.

ib. Elog. Hist. & ap. Smith in App. p. 807. (14) Notker ad 13 Cal. Apr.

example, spirit and instructions, he learned from his infancy the maxims and practice of perfect sanctity. St Chrysostom (15) wished that parents would breed up their children in monasteries till they are to be produced in the world. Several Roman senators and other noblemen committed the education of their sons to St Bennet. The most austere and regular monasteries have been chosen by virtuous parents of the first rank, whose principal desire was, that their children should be brought up among saints, where their passions would be in no danger of being flattered, and where their minds would be filled with Christian verities, and Christ's spirit, and their hearts formed to piety, grounded in the love, and exercised in habits, of all virtues. This is the first and essential advantage which parents are bound to procure their children, upon which their temporal and eternal happiness depends, and all other advantages and qualifications are to be founded. Let them not be neglected, but let this be secured in the first place, and at all rates.

ON THE SAME DAY.

St JULIUS, M. This Martyr was a veteran soldier, and was impeached by his officers for the Christian faith, before Maximus, governor of the Lower Mœsia, which was afterwards called Bulgaria. Pasocrates and Valention, both of the same regiment, had received the crown of martyrdom a little before. The judge employed caresses, promises, and threats: but Julius professed that to die for Christ, in order to live eternally with him, would be the accomplishment of all his desires. Whereupon he was condemned to lose his head, and led forth to the place of execution. As he went, Hesychius, a Christian soldier, who was also a prisoner, and suffered martyrdom a few days after him, said: "Go with courage, and run to the crown which the Lord hath promised: and remember me, who shall shortly follow you. Commend me to the seryants of God, Pasocrates and Valention, who, by confessing the holy name of Jesus, are gone before us." Julius, embracing Hesychius, said: "Dear Brother, make haste to come to us; they whom you salute, have already heard you." (a) Julius bound his eyes with a handkerchief, and presenting his neck to the executioner, said: "Lord Jesus, for whose name I suffer death, vouchsafe to receive my soul in the number of thy saints." His martyrdom happened on the 27th day of May, two days after that of St. Pasocrates, about the year 302, in the reign of Dioclesian, at Durostoro on the Danube, in the second Mœsia. See his genuine acts in Ruinart, p. 615. Tillem. T. 5.

(15) St Chrys. l. 3. centr. Vitup. Vitæ. monast. p. 94. 95. 99. T. I. ed. Ben.

M A Y XXVIII.

ST GERMANUS, BISHOP OF PARIS, C.

See his life by Fortunatus of Poitiers, St Gregory of Tours, hist. l. 4. c. 26. Mabillon Annal. Bened. l. 5. p. 132. and Acta. Ord. Bened. T. 1. p. 234. Also Dom Bouillart, Hist. de l'abbaye de St. Germain des Prez. fol. Paris 1723. Dom Lobineau, Hist. de Paris, n. 25. 29. &c.

A. D. 576.

ST. GERMANUS, the glory of the church of France in the sixth age, was born in the territory of Autun, about the year 496. He was brought up in piety and learning under the care of Scapilion his cousin, a holy priest. In his youth, no weather could divert him from always going to matins at midnight, though the church was above a mile from the place of his abode. Being ordained priest by St Agrippinus bishop of Autun, he was made abbot of St Symphorian's in the suburbs of that city, a house since converted into a priory of regular canons. Fortunatus, bishop of Poitiers, who was well acquainted with our saint, tells us, that he was favoured at that time with the gifts of miracles and prophecy. It was his custom to watch great part of the night in the church in prayer, whilst his monks slept. One night, in a dream, he thought a venerable old man presented him with the keys of the city of Paris, and said to him, that God committed to his care the inhabitants of that city, that he should save them from perishing. Four years after this divine admonition, in 554, happening to be at Paris when that see became vacant, on the demise of the bishop Eusebius, he was exalted to the episcopal chair, though he endeavoured by many tears to decline the charge. His promotion made no alteration in his continual fasts and other austerities: and the same simplicity and frugality appeared in his dress, table, and furniture. In the evening, at nine o'clock, he went to the church, and staid there in prayer till after matins, that is, in summer, till about break of day. His house was perpetually crowded with the poor and the afflicted, and he had always many beggars at his own table, at which no dainty meats were ever served; he took care that the souls of his guests should be refreshed at the same time with their bodies, by the reading of some pious book. God gave to his sermons a wonderful influence over the minds of all ranks of people; so that the face of the whole city was in a very short time quite changed. Vanities were abolished, dances and profane amusements laid aside, enmities and discord extinguished, and sinners reclaimed. King Childebert, who till then had been an ambitious worldly prince, by the sweetness, and the powerful discourses of the saint, was entirely converted to piety, and by his advice reformed his whole court. And so desirous did that prince become of exchanging the perishing goods of this world for eternal treasures, that, not content with making many religious foundations, to be nurseries of piety in all succeeding ages, and with sending incredible sums of money to the good bishop, to be distributed among the indigent, after his coffers were drained, he melted down his silver plate, and gave away the chains which he wore about his neck; begging the bishop, whom he made the steward of his charities, never to cease giving, assuring him, that on his side he should never be tired with supplying all things for the relief and comfort of the distressed.

(a) Mandata tua jam audierunt quos salutasti. Ruinart.

In the year 542, king Childebert, together with his brother Clotaire, making war in Spain, besieged Saragosa. The inhabitants of that city reposed a particular confidence in the patronage of St Vincent, whose relics they carried in procession within sight of the French camp. King Childebert was moved with their devotion, and desiring to speak with the bishop of the city, promised to withdraw his army, on condition he might obtain some portion of the relicks of St Vincent. The bishop gave him the stole which that holy deacon wore at the altar. Upon which the king raised the siege, and, at his return to Paris, built a church in honour of St Vincent, and of the holy cross; which is now called St German's in the meadows, and stands in the suburbs of Paris. Childebert falling sick at his palace at Celles, near Melun, at the confluence of the Yon and Seine, St Germanus paid him a visit; and when the physicians had in vain tried every thing, all human means failing, the saint spent the whole night in prayer for his recovery, and in the morning laid his hands on him; and at the same moment the king found himself perfectly healed. The king relates himself this miracle in his letters patent, in which, in gratitude to God for this benefit, he gave to the church of Paris and the bishop Germanus, the land of Celles, where he had received this favour. The good king did not long survive. As the king had chosen the church of St Vincent for the place of his burial, the saint, assisted by six other bishops, performed the ceremony of the dedication, on the 23d of December 558, the very day on which that prince died. The king likewise had built a large monastery joining to this new church, which he endowed most liberally with the fief of Issy and other lands, on part of which a considerable suburb of Paris has been since built. This magnificent edifice was called the Golden Church, the walls being covered on the outside with plates of brass gilt, and within adorned with paintings on a rich gilt ground

(1). This church was plundered by the Normans in 845, 857, 858, and set on fire by them in 861 and 881; but rebuilt in 1014, and dedicated by pope Alexander III. in 1163. The lower part of the great tower and its gate, with the statues of Clovis, Clodomir, Thierrî, Childebèrt, and his wife Ultrogotta, Clotaire, and others, seem to be as old as the time of king Childebèrt. This prince committed the monastery and church to the care of our saint, who placed three monks under the holy abbot Droctoveus, whom he had invited from Autun, where he had formed him to a religious life (a). Clotaire, who succeeded his brother Childebèrt, was the last of the sons of the great Clovis; and united again the four kingdoms of France into one monarchy. On his removing from Soissons to Paris, he at first seemed to treat the holy bishop coldly: but falling ill soon after of a violent fever, was put in mind by some that were about him to send for St Germanus.

(1) See the description of this church in the life of St Droctoveus, written by Gislemar the monk.

(a) Gislemar, in the life of St Droctoveus, positively affirms that St Germanus appointed St Droctoveus first abbot: which is proved by Mabillon and Ruinart. The interpolator of Aimoin, and certain anonymous writers of the 12th century, from registers of this abbey, say that Antharius, formerly sub-prior of St Symphorian's at Autun, was the first abbot of the monastery of the Holy Cross and St Vincent: which is warmly defended by F. Germon, a Jesuit, against Ruinart. The rule which St Germanus first settled in this abbey, was borrowed from the Orientals, but that of St Bennet's was afterwards adopted. The general of the Maurist Benedictin monks usually makes this house his residence. The abbots of St Germain-des-Prez exercised all jurisdiction both spiritual and temporal, over the suburbs of St Germain, till archbishop Pèrefixe recovered the former in 1668, and the Chatelet of Paris, the latter in 1674. But by a transaction in 1669, the regular prior of the Abbey is Grand-Vicar born of the archbishopric. The abbatial exemption and jurisdiction, which were extended over Seculars, have been confined intra claustra, or within the precincts. In the year 1675, the king declared that the abbey should continue to enjoy the exercise and the prerogative of what the French call Haute Justice in all the places occupied by the monks or their servants, and in the territory, called the Inclosure of the abbey, which was of some extent, and contained a number of houses and shops. See Piganiol, Descript. de Paris, T. 7. and D. Bouillart, Hist. de l'Abbaye de St Germain-de-Prez.

He did so, and full of confidence in the power of God, and the sanctity of his servant, took hold of his clothes, and applied them to the parts of his body where he felt pain, and recovered immediately. From that moment he always treated the saint even with greater honour than Childebert had done. But that prince dying shortly after, in 561, his four sons, Charibert, Gontran, Sigebert, and Chilperic, divided the French monarchy into four kingdoms, in the same manner as the sons of Clovis had done. That of Paris was given to Charibert or Aribert, Gontran was king of Orleans and Burgundy, Sigebert of Austrasia, and Chilperic of Soissons. Charibert sunk into a vicious indolence, yet was obstinate and headstrong in his passions; not being divested of all the prejudices of paganism, he divorced his wife Ingoberga, and took to wife Marcovesa, her maid, who had worn a religious habit: and after her death, he married her sister Merofleda, Ingoberga being still living. Our saint many ways endeavoured to make him sensible of the enormity of his crimes; but finding all his remonstrances lost on him, he proceeded so far as to excommunicate him, and the accomplice of his sin, to hinder at least the dangerous influence of his scandalous example. The sinners were hardened in their evil courses; but God revenged the contempt of his laws, and of the holy pastor, as he has often done, by visible judgments. For the criminal lady fell ill, and died in a few days; and the adulterous king did not long survive her, leaving, by his lawful wife, only three daughters, two of whom became nuns, the third, called Bertha, was married to Ethelbert king of Kent.

Upon the death of Charibert in 570, his three brothers divided his dominions; but not being able to agree who should be master of Paris, the capital, came to an accommodation that they should hold it jointly, on condition that none of them should go into the city without the leave of the other two. St Germanus found his flock involved by this agreement in great difficulties, and the city divided into three different parties, always plotting and counter-plotting against one another. He did all that the most consummate charity, prudence, and vigilance, could do, to preserve the public peace; yet Sigebert and Chilperic appeared in arms, being fired by ambition, and stirred up by their wicked queens, Fredegonda, wife of the latter, and Brunehaut of the former, burning with the most implacable jealousy against each other. The saint prevailed with them to suspend their hostilities for some time. At length Chilperic invaded the territories of Sigebert, but being worsted in battle, fled to Tournay. This victory left Sigebert free liberty of going to Paris with his wife Brunehaut and children, where he was received as conqueror. St Germanus wrote to the queen, conjuring her to employ her interest with her husband to restore the peace of France, and to spare the life and fortune of a brother, whose ruin and blood would cry to heaven for vengeance. But Brunehaut's passion rendered her deaf to all remonstrances, and Sigebert was determined by her furious counsels to besiege Tournay. As he was setting out for this enterprize, he was met by St Germanus, who told him that if he forgave his brother, he should return victorious: but if he was bent on his death, divine justice would overtake him, and his own death should prevent the execution of his unnatural design. Sigebert allowed this wholesome advice no weight; but the event shewed that God had put these words in the mouth of the good bishop. For queen Fredegonda, enraged at the desperate posture of her husband's affairs, hired two assassins who dispatched him with poisoned daggers, whilst he made a halt in his march at Vitri, in 575, after he had reigned fourteen years, with some reputation of humanity, as Fortunatus tells us.

Chilperic, by his tyranny and oppression, deserved to be styled the French Nero, as St Gregory of Tours calls him. He sacrificed his own children by former wives to the fury of Fredegonda, but, having discovered her infidelity to him, he was, by her contrivance, murdered by her gallant in 584. Fredegonda was regent of the kingdoms of Soissons and Paris for her son Clotaire II. and continued her practices and wars against Brunehaut and her son till she died in 601. Brunehaut governed the kingdom of Austrasia for her son Childebert II., and after his death for her grandson Theodebert; but afterwards persuaded Theodoric her second grandson, who reigned at Challons, to destroy him and his whole family in 611. The year following, Theodoric died, and Clotaire II. surnamed the Great, son of Fredegonda, inheriting both their estates, accused Brunehaut before the states, of putting to death ten kings and St Desiderius bishop of Vienne, because he had reproved her for her public scandalous lusts, and many other illustrious persons. She had at first appeared liberal, and built several churches; but afterwards became infamous for her cruelty, avarice, restless ambition, and insatiable lusts, to which she sacrificed all things, and employed both the sword and poison in perpetrating her wicked designs. Being condemned by the states, she was put to the rack during three days, and afterwards dragged to death, being tied to the tail of a wild mare; or, according to others, drawn betwixt four horses, in 613 (b).

St Germanus lived not to see the miserable ends of these two firebrands of their country. In his old age he lost nothing of that zeal and activity with which he had filled the great duties of his station, in the vigour of his life; nor did the weakness to which his corporal austerities had reduced him, make him abate any thing in the mortifications of his penitential life, in which he redoubled his fervour, as he approached nearer to the end of his course. By his zeal the remains of idolatry were extirpated in France. In the third council of Paris, in 557, he had the principal share in drawing up the canons. By his advice, King Childebert issued an edict, commanding all idols to be destroyed throughout his dominions, and forbidding all indecent dances and diversions, on Sundays and festivals. The saint continued his labours for the conversion of sinners, till he was called to receive the reward of them on the 28th of May 576, being 80 years old. King

(b) See Mezeray and Challons Hist. of France.

Chilperic composed his epitaph, in which he extols his zeal for the salvation of his people, and their affection and veneration for his person. He mentions the miracles which were wrought at his tomb, and says that sight was restored to the blind, and speech to the dumb (2). He was, according to his own desire, buried in St Symphorian's chapel, which he built at the bottom of the church of St Vincent, already mentioned. Many miracles manifested his sanctity, of which Fortunatus, then a priest, afterwards bishop of Poitiers, has left us a history, in which he gives two on his own evidence. Also two anonymous monks compiled relations of several miracles of St Germanus, which Aimoinus (c), a monk of this monastery in 870, and a careful writer, digested into two books (3). The relicks of St Germanus remained in the aforesaid chapel till the year 754, when the abbot removed them into the body of the church. The ceremony of this translation was performed with great solemnity; and king Pepin thought himself honoured by assisting at it. Prince Charles, known afterwards by the name of Charlemagne, who was then but seven years old, attended his father on this occasion, and was so strongly affected with the miracles performed at that time, that when he came to the crown, he took a particular pleasure in relating them, with all their circumstances. The greatest part of the relicks of St Germanus remain still in this church of St Vincent, commonly called St German-des-Prez. This abbey is possessed of the original privilege of its foundation and exemption, written on bark, and subscribed by St Germanus, St Nicetius, and several other bishops (d). The most valuable work of St Germanus of Paris, is An Exposition of the litur-

(2) Apud Aimoinum, l. 2. c. 16. (3) Apud Mabil. Sæc. 4. Bened. T. 2. and Bolland. ad 28 Maij.

(c) This Aimoinus must not be confounded with another of the same name in 1001, author of the history of France in four books; and of a history of the miracles of St Bennet. This latter was a monk of Fleury.

(d) On its authenticity see Valois, Discept. de Basilicis, p. 53. Dom Quatremaires and Dom Mabillon.

gy (c), published from an ancient manuscript by Dom Martenne (4). The characteristic virtue of St Germanus, was his unbounded charity to the poor. Liberality in alms moves God to be liberal to us in the dispensations of his spiritual graces: but he who hardens his heart to the injuries and wants of others, shuts against himself the treasury of heaven.

ON THE SAME DAY.

St CARAUNUS, called also CARANUS, and CARO, in French CHERON, M. He was a native of Gaul, and flourished towards the end of the fifth age. After the death of his parents, who were Christians, he distributed all his substance to the poor; and, in order to serve God with more ease, retired into a desert, where the bishop of the place discovering his merit, ordained him a deacon.

He then determined to consecrate himself entirely to the ministry of the word; and having preached in several provinces of Gaul (a), he came into the territory of Chartrain, where he found but a small number of Christians, the descendants of those who had been formerly converted by St Potentianus, and St Altinus (b). The gospel having made a rapid progress by his zeal, he made choice of some disciples to assist him in extending the knowledge of Jesus Christ; and set out on his way to Paris.

He had scarce advanced three leagues from Chartres when he perceived a gang of robbers approaching towards him: whereupon he advised his disciples to hide

(4) Anecdote. T. 5. p. 91.

(c) In it we have the genuine ancient Gallican liturgy or mass, which was used in France before the Roman was introduced in the time of Charlemagne and pope Adrian I. This Latin Gallican mass, in all its parts, bears an uniform resemblance with the Roman. St Germanus in this most curious work explains the ancient ceremonies of the liturgy, and all the sacred vestments, &c.

(a) Gaul was then divided between the Franks, the Burgundians, and the Visigoths. The first were for the most part idolaters, the others professed Arianism, but were scarce better than infidels.

(b) These two saints were sent into this country by St Savinianus bishop of Sens, in the reign of the emperor Dioclesian.

themselves among the thickets, while he would amuse the robbers by discoursing with them. These savages, provoked at not finding any money in his possession, fell upon him and inhumanly murdered him. Thus died St Caraunus, a martyr of charity.

His disciples buried his body near Chartres upon an eminence which was since called the holy mount; and after some time a church was erected there under his invocation, the care of which was entrusted to a community of ecclesiastics; but the canon regulars were substituted in their room in 1137. The relicks of St Caraunus are kept in the abbey of his name near Chartres. The president of Lamoignon obtained one bone of them in 1681 for the church which is dedicated to the saint at Mont-couronne, one of the parishes of Baville. His name is mentioned on this day in the martyrologies: and the feast of his translation is kept at Chartres on the 18th of October. See the Bollandists, T. 6. Maii, p. 748. Baillet, 28 Maii; Gall. Christ. nov. T. 8. p. 1091. & 1305; the new Paris Breviary, &c.

M A Y XXIX.

ST MAXIMINUS, BISHOP OF TRIERS, C.

From the works of St Athanasius and St Hilary, and from the councils. See Tillem. T. 7. p. 248. Rivet, Hist. Lit. Fr. T. 1. and Calmet, Hist. Lorr. T. 1.

A. D. 349.

ST Maximinus was one of those pastors whom God raised in the most dangerous times to support his church. He was born at Poitiers, nobly descended, and related to Maxentius bishop of that city before St Hilary. The reputation of the sanctity of St Agritius, bishop of Triers, drew him young to that city, and, after a most virtuous education, he was admitted to holy orders, and, upon the death of Agritius, chosen his successor in 332. When St Athanasius was banished to Triers, in 336, St Maximinus received him, not as a person disgraced, but as a most glorious confessor of Christ, and thought it a great happiness to enjoy the company of so illustrious a saint. St Athanasius stayed with him two years; and his works bear evidence to the indefatigable vigilance, heroic courage, and exemplary virtue of our saint, who was before that time famous for the gift of miracles. St Paul, bishop of Constantinople, being banished by Constantius, found also a retreat at Triers, and in St Maximinus a powerful protector. Our saint, by his counsels, cautioned the emperor Constans against the intrigues and snares of the Arians, and on every occasion discovered their artifices, and opposed their faction. He was one of the most illustrious defenders of the catholic faith in the council of Sardica, in 347, and had the honour to be ranked by the Arians with St Athanasius, in an excommunication which they pretended to fulminate against them at Philippopolis. St Maximinus is said to have died in Poitou, in 349, having made a journey thither to see his relations. He was buried near Poitiers; but his body was afterward translated to Triers, on the day which is now devoted to his memory. St Maximinus, by protecting and harbouring saints, received himself the recompence of a saint.

ON THE SAME DAY.

St CYRIL, M. This saint was as yet a child when he glorified God by martyrdom, at Cæsarea in Cappadocia. His father being an idolater, seeing his young son, who had been privately made a Christian, refuse to adore his idols, after all manner of severe usage, turned him out of doors. The governor of Cæsarea being informed of it, gave orders that Cyril should be brought before him. Enraged to hear him never cease to proclaim the name of Jesus, he told him with many caresses, that he ought to detest that name, and promised him the pardon of his faults, a reconciliation with his father, and the inheritance of his estate, if he obeyed. The courageous child answered: "I rejoice in suffering reproaches for what I have done. God will receive me, with whom I shall be better than with my father. I cheerfully renounce earthly estates and house, that I may be made rich in heaven. I am not afraid of death, because it will procure me a better life." This he said with a courage which shewed that God spoke in him. The judge commanded him to be publicly bound, and to be led as if it had been to execution, but he gave orders in private that they should only frighten him. Being placed before a great fire, and threatened to be thrown into it, yet he was not daunted. He was then carried back to the judge, who said to him: "My child, you have seen both the fire and the sword. Be wise, and return to your house and fortune." The martyr answered: "You have done me a real prejudice in calling me back. I neither fear the fire nor the sword: God will receive me. Put me to death without delay, that I may the sooner go to him." All the assistants wept to hear him speak in this manner. But he said to them: "You ought rather to rejoice: you know not what is my hope, nor what kind of kingdom I am going to possess." With these sentiments he went joyfully to his death. He seems to have died by the sword. His name occurs in the martyrology, which bears the name of St Jerom, and in that of Florus. He suffered under Decius or Valerian. See his authentic acts in Ruinart and Henschenius, probably compiled by St Firmilian, bishop of Cæsarea.

ST CONON and his son, martyrs of Iconia in Asia. This faithful servant of Jesus Christ, after the death of his wife, lived in retirement with his son, whom he offered to the church, and who was made a lector (a) at the age of twelve, and afterward became a dea-

(a) Those who aspire to the priesthood are first initiated by the clerical tonsure, which is not properly an order, but only a preparation for orders: after which they must pass through the minor or lesser orders, according to the practice of the primitive church. These are, the orders of porter or door-keeper of the church, called ostiarius; lector or reader of the lessons in the divine office; exorcist, whose function is to read the exorcisms and prayers of the church over those who are possessed by the evil spirit; and acolyte, whose function

con. About this time Domitian, an officer under the emperor Aurelian, came to Iconia in order to execute the edict which that prince had issued against the Christians; and Conon and his son were among the first who were brought before him. The officer, moved with compassion for the venerable old man, asked him why he had chosen so severe and mortified a life? to which the saint replied: "Those who live according to the spirit of the world, are fond of pleasures and ease; but those who live according to the spirit of God, study to purchase the kingdom of heaven by pain and tribulation. As for me, my desire is to forfeit my life here, that I may for ever reign with Jesus Christ." Whereupon both the father and son were ordered to be stretched on a burning gridiron, and afterwards to be hung up by the feet over a suffocating smoke. Conon, amidst these torments, reproached the executioners for the weakness of their efforts: which so provoked the tyrant, that he caused the hands of the martyrs to be cut off with a wooden saw. Conon then said to him; "Are you not ashamed to see two poor weak persons triumph over all your power." The martyrs having prayed for some time, calmly breathed their last. They suffered about the year 275, before notice had arrived of the death of Aurelian. Their relicks are kept in a church of their name at Acerra, near Naples, to which they were brought in the ninth age, or later. St Conon and his son are mentioned in the ancient martyrologies. See their acts, which, though not original, are nevertheless of great antiquity, and written with equal piety and simplicity.

function is to serve the holy sacrifice of the mass, to light the candles, &c. From the minor orders they are promoted to the order of subdeacon, which is the first of those that are called holy; the subdeacon is for ever engaged to the service of God and his church in the state of perpetual continence, and is obliged to the canonical hours in the church-office, and to assist the deacon in his ministry. From this order they are advanced to that of deacon, whose office is to assist the bishop, or priest, at mass, to preach the gospel, to baptize, &c. The next ascent is to the order of priest or presbyter: above this, is the order of bishops, amongst whom the chief is called the Pope.

The Bollandists give them on the 29th of May. See also Tillemont, Hist. Eccles. T. 4. p. 354.

SS. SISINNIUS, MARTYRIUS, and ALEXANDER, Martyrs, in the territory of Trent. These three saints, of whom the two last were brothers, came from Cappadocia to Italy in the reign of Theodosius the Elder. They remained some time at Milan, where St Ambrose treated them with all the respect due to their virtue. St Vigilius, bishop of Trent, having ordained Sisinnius a deacon, Martyrius a lector, and Alexander a porter or door keeper, sent them to preach the gospel in the Alps, where the Christian religion was scarcely known. They exerted their zeal particularly amongst the inhabitants of the districts of Anania, called afterwards the valley of Anagna, or Egna; and, notwithstanding the opposition and ill treatment they met with, they at length, by their patience, meekness and charity, gained a number of souls to Jesus Christ. Sisinnius built a church in the village of Methon, or Medol, where he assembled his new converts to complete their instruction.

The pagans, perceiving their own number daily diminishing, formed a resolution to oblige the new Christians to assist on one of their festivals at an idolatrous procession: but Sisinnius and his companions laboured to withdraw them from it. This so enraged the pagans, that they determined to destroy the holy preachers; and going to the church where these were singing the divine praises, they beat them with clubs in so cruel a manner, that Sisinnius died in a few hours. Next morning, Martyrius and Alexander sung forth the praises of God as calmly as if nothing had happened them; but retired on the approach of the pagans, who came to the church to vent their rage on the bodies of the preachers. They found only that of Sisinnius, to which they offered many indignities: then going in search of his companions, they discovered Martyrius concealed in a garden, and dragged him by the legs over sharp stones, till he gave up his soul to his Redeemer. There remained now only A-alexander, who soon fell into their hands. They first endeavoured by menaces to make him renounce his faith, and in his presence burned the bodies of Sisinus and Martyrius; but, finding all their attempts fruitless, they cast him into the same fire, where he completed his sacrifice, the 29th of May. 397. The faithful collected the ashes of the three saints, which were conveyed to Trent; afterward St Vigilius erected a church on the spot where they suffered, and sent to several bishops the history of their triumph: we have still extant some of his letters on this subject to St Simplicianus of Milan, and to St Chrysostom. He also made several distributions of the relicks of the three martyrs. See their acts in the Bollandists, with the letters of St Vigilius of Trent to St Simplicianus, and to St Chrysostom, &c.

M A Y X X X .

S T F E L I X I . P O P E , M .

See the Bollandists, and Tillemont, T. 4.

A. D. 274.

HE was a Roman by birth, and succeeded St Dionysius in the government of the church in 269. Paul of Samosata, the proud bishop of Antioch, to the guilt of many enormous crimes, added that of heresy, teaching that Christ was no more than a mere man, in whom the Divine Word dwelt, by its operation, and as in its temple; with many other gross errors concerning the capital mysteries of the Trinity and Incarnation. Two councils were held at Antioch to examine his cause, but by various arts and subterfuges he escaped condemnation. However, in a third, assembled at the same place, in 269, being clearly convicted of heresy; pride, and many scandalous crimes, he was excommunicated and deposed, and Domnus was substituted in his room. Paul still maintained himself in the possession of the episcopal house. The bishop therefore had recourse to the emperor Aurelian, who, though a pagan, gave an order that the house should belong to him to whom the bishops of Rome and Italy adjudged it, as Eusebius writes (1) St Felix had before declared himself against that heresiarch; for the council had sent the synodal letter to St. Dionysius, who being dead, it had been delivered to St Felix. It must have been on that occasion that our holy pope wrote to Maximus, bishop of Alexandria, a learned epistle, quoted by the council of Ephesus, St Cyril of Alexandria, and St Vincent of Lerins; in which he clearly explained the catholic doctrine of the whole mystery of the Incarnation. St Cyril has preserved us a fragment of it. (2) The persecution of Aurelian breaking out, St Felix, fearless of dangers, strengthened the weak, encouraged all, baptized the catechumens, and continued to exert himself in converting infidels to the faith. He himself obtained the glory of martyrdom; which title is given him by the council of Ephesus, (3) by St Cyril, (4) and by St Vincent of Lerins. (5) He governed the church five years, and passed to a glorious eternity in 274. The western martyrologies name him on the 30th of May.

The example of Christ, and of all his saints, ought to encourage us under all trials to suffer with patience, and even with joy. We shall soon begin to feel that it is sweet to tread in the steps of a God-man, and shall find that if we courageously take up our crosses, he will make them light by bearing them with us. The soul will find it sweet to be abandoned by creatures, that she may more perfectly feel their emptiness, and learn that men are false and treacherous. Then will she place her whole confidence in God alone, and cleave to him with her whole heart. Forsaken and forgotten by creatures, she finds no relish but in God, who enters her more powerfully, and fills her with his consolations the more sweetly, as she is the more weaned and separated from all earthly things, and more purely adheres to him who never forsakes those who sincerely seek Him. O happy exchange! cries out St Francis of Sales: the soul thus abandoned in the eyes of men, now possesses God instead of creatures.

(1) L. 7. c. 80. p. 282. (2) Apologet. p. 852. (3) Act 1. Conc. T. 1. p. 312. (4) Apol. T. 3. Conc. p. 852. (5) P. 375.

ST WALSTAN, CONFESSOR.

From Capgrave, fol. 285, and his old manuscript life. See Blomfield, Hist. of Norfolk, ~~Tom. 6. p. 644~~ - vol. 2. p. 387

A. D. 1016.

ST. WALSTAN, was formerly much honoured at Cossey, and Bawburgh, commonly called Baber, two villages four miles from Norwich. He was born at Baber, and of a rich and honourable family. The name of his father was Benedict, that of his mother Blida. By their example and good instruction he, from his infancy, conceived an ardent desire to devote himself to God, with the greatest perfection possible. In this view, at twelve years of age he renounced his patrimony, left his father's house, and entered a poor servant at Taverham, a village adjoining to Cossey. He was so charitable that he gave his own victuals to the poor, and sometimes even his shoes, going himself barefoot. He applied himself to the meanest and most painful country labour in a perfect spirit of penance and humility; fasted much, and sanctified his soul and all his actions by assiduous fervent prayer, and the constant union of his heart with God. He made a vow of celibacy, but never embraced a monastic state. God honoured his humility before men by many miracles. He died in the midst of a meadow where he was at work, on the thirtieth of May in 1016. His body was interred at Baber: it was carried thither through Cossey or Costessye, where a well still bears his name, as does another, which was more famous at Baber, a little below the church. These places were much resorted to by pilgrims especially, to implore the intercession of this saint for the cure of fevers, palsies, lameness, and blindness. His body was enshrined in the north chapel of that church, which chapel was on that account pulled down in the reign of Henry VIII. though the church is still standing. All the mowers and husbandmen in these parts constantly visited it once a year, and innumerable other pilgrims resorted to it, not only from all parts of England, but also from beyond the seas. The church is sacred to the memory of the Blessed Virgin, and of St Walstan.

ON THE SAME DAY.

ST FERDINAND III. King of Castile and Leon, C. He was eldest son to Alphonsus King of Leon, and of Berangera of Castile, elder sister (a) of Blanche, mother of St Lewis of France, and was born about the end of the year 1198 or some time in 1199. Berangera had been obliged by pope Innocent III. to a separation from Alphonsus of Leon after having borne to him two sons, Ferdinand and Alphonsus, and two daughters; because, though in the third degree of consanguinity, they had been married without a dispensation, which was at that time very difficult to be obtained. But because this marriage had been contracted bona fide, by the decrees of the pope, and the states of the two kingdoms, their children were declared their lawful heirs. Berangera returned to her father Alphonsus IX. of Castile, one of the most valiant and most virtuous kings that ever reigned in Spain, and who was to her the most tender and best of fathers. He dying in 1214, his son Henry, eleven years of age, succeeded him under the tutorship and regency of his mother Eleonor of England. But she followed her husband to the grave within twenty-five days, grief for having lost him being the cause of her death. Berangera was charged with the guardianship of her brother and the regency of the kingdom, but, out of love of retirement, suffered herself to be persuaded to resign both to a nobleman called Don Alvarez, who proved a perfidious turbulent man, and for several years embroiled all Castile, and the neighbouring kingdoms. Berangera was a princess of accomplished prudence and piety, and exercises of devotion were her chief delight. King Henry, by the contrivance of Alvarez, at twelve years of age, was married to Mafalda, sister to Alphonsus, king of Portugal; but, upon an impediment of consanguinity, which was proved before commissaries, pope Innocent III. declared the marriage null, and Mafalda returning to Portugal, founded a Cistercian nunnery at Arouca, took herself the veil, and lived in so great sanctity, as to be honoured among the saints on the 1st of May. The young king Henry died of a wound he received by a tile falling upon his head at Palencia on the 6th of June 1217, and Berangera put in her claim to the crown; but transferring her right upon her son Ferdinand, surnamed the Saint, caused him, who was in the 18th year of his age, to be proclaimed king at Palencia, Valladolid, and Burgos, having first lodged in the archives of the church of this last city, the solemn act of her own resignation. Don Alvarez, and other factious spirits, filled the kingdom with disturbances and civil wars for several years: but these, the young king, by his clemency, prudence, and valour, assisted by his mother's counsels, stifled and overcame. Alvarez was taken and pardoned; and perfidiously renewed his treasonable cabals and broils both at home and abroad. Though Ferdinand was so great a king, no child ever obeyed a mother with a more ready and perfect submission than he did Berangera, to the time of her death, as his ancient historian assures us. (1) By her advice, he took to wife, in 1219, Beatrix, daughter of Philip of Suabia, emperor of Germany, a most virtuous and accomplished princess. The happy union of their hearts was never disturbed by the least cloud during the 15 years of their cohabitation, and their marriage was blessed with a numerous family of seven sons and three daughters. S. Ferdinand was severe in the administration and the execution of the laws, but readily pardoned all personal injuries; and no sooner were rebellions crushed, but he granted general amnesties. His prudence, and his constant attention to the care of his people appeared most conspicuous in the happy choice he always made of governors, magistrates, and generals. Rodriguez, archbishop of Toledo, and chancellor of Castile, was, during 30 years, at the head of all his councils, and so perfectly united with Berangera and St Ferdinand in all their deliberations, as to seem to have but one soul with them. To set a curb to inferior tribunals, he established the court, since called the royal council of Castile, which consists of ten auditors, and to which there lies an appeal from all other courts. A code of laws, which he caused to be compiled by the most able lawyers (b), is still used in that kingdom.

(a) Roderiguez, at that time first dean, then archbishop of Toledo, assures us that Berangera was the eldest of all the children of this king, and next heir to the kingdom after her brother's death. It is therefore a notorious mistake of those who call Blanche the elder sister.

(1) Luc. Tudens.

Nothing ever so much troubled our saint, as when his own father Alphonsus, king of Leon, stirred up by Alvarez, laid claim to, and invaded his dominions. St Ferdinand endeavoured, by the most dutiful and endearing letters, to give him all possible satisfaction, and lent him his own forces to fight against the Moors. With this succour, his father conquered Caures, Merida, and Badajos, and extended his dominions to the frontiers of Andalusia. Being resolved, as much as possible, never to draw his sword but against the infidels, he restored several places the claims to which seemed doubtful, and waved all occasions of quarrels with the kings of Portugal and Arragon, and with Eleonor of England, in Gascony. He founded several bishoprics, and contributed munificently to the building or repairing of many stately cathedrals, other churches, monasteries, and hospitals. No necessity could ever make him impose any heavy tax upon his subjects. In his wars with the Moors, when one suggested to him a method of raising an extraordinary subsidy, he rejected the proposal with indignation; saying, God would not fail to supply him other ways, and that he feared more the curse of one poor old woman, than the whole army of the Moors. He first marched against them into the kingdom of Baëza, in 1225; and, in the second year, Aben Mahomet, a prince of the race of the Miramolins of Africa, king of that country, yielded himself up vassal to king

(b) This code is called by the Spaniards Las Partidas.

Ferdinand, and surrendered to him his strongest holds. In 1230 he took near 20 strong places in Andalusia, and in the kingdoms of Cordova, and Jaën. Aben Mahomet having been murdered by a general conspiracy of his subjects, because he had made himself vassal to a Christian king, who was the sworn enemy of their religion, St Ferdinand took occasion to conquer the whole kingdom of Baëça, and to erect a bishopric in its capital. His whole conduct bore testimony to the truth of his solemn protestation, in which he appealed to heaven, saying : (2) " Thou, O Lord, who searchest the secrets of hearts, knowest that I desire thy glory, not mine ; and the increase of thy faith, and holy religion, not of transitory kingdoms." The archbishop Rodriguez performed the solemn office, and all pastoral functions in the army, and the bishop of Palentia in his room one year that he happened to be sick. St Ferdinand set his soldiers the most perfect example of devotion. He fasted rigorously, prayed much, wore a rough hair-shirt made in the shape of a cross, spent often whole nights in tears and prayers, especially before battles, and gave to God the whole glory of all his victories. In his army he caused an image of the Blessed Virgin to be carried, and wore another small one on his breast, or sometimes, when on horseback, placed it on the pommel of his saddle before him. From the spoils taken in war he contributed in a truly royal manner to the rebuilding of the most stately cathedral of Toledo, of which he laid the first stone. Several towns which were conquered from the Moors, he gave to the Order of Calatrava or others, and to the archbishopric of Toledo, upon condition they should defend them against the Infidels. This is the origin of the great riches of that archbishopric, and of the military religious Orders in Spain.

St Ferdinand was marching to lay siege to Jaën in 1230, when he received news of the death of his father Alphonsus of Leon, and was called by his mother to take possession of that kingdom, which from that time has remained united with Castile. It cost him three years to settle the affairs of his new kingdom; but in 1234 he recommenced his wars against the Moors by the siege of Ubeda, which he took after having spent the whole campaign before it. In the mean time the Infant Alphonsus with 1500 men defeated at Xeres the formidable army of Abenbut, king of Seville, divided into seven bodies of troops, each of which was more numerous than the whole Christian army. From the deposition of several prisoners and others, the Christians concluded that the apostle St James had appeared at the head of their troops, in the armour of a knight, mounted on a white horse; and this victory cost the Christians only the lives of one knight who had refused to forgive an injury, and ten soldiers. The joy of these victories was allayed by the death of the virtuous queen Beatrix, St Ferdinand's consort, who departed this life at Toro, about the beginning of the year 1236. The grief for this loss did not long suspend his warlike operations; and whilst James king of Arragon wrested from the Moors the kingdom of Majorca, and that of Valentia, he completed the conquest of the two Moorish kingdoms of Baëça and Cordova. This last city had been in the hands of those Infidels 524 years, and had been long the capital of their empire in Spain, when St Ferdinand after a long siege entered it by capitulation on SS. Peter and Paul's day in 1236. The great mosque was purified by John, bishop of Osma, and converted into a church under the invocation of the Mother of God, and St Ferdinand refounded there a bishopric. The great bells of Compostella, which Almansor had caused to be brought hither on the backs of Christians, St Ferdinand commanded to be carried back on the backs of Moors.

(2) Sancius, Episc. Palent. Hist. Hisp. par. 3. c. 39.

In 1237, by the counsels of his mother, he married a second wife, chiefly at the recommendation of his aunt Blanche dowager-queen of France. This was Jane of Ponthieu, who bore him two sons and a daughter

(c), and lived in the most happy constant harmony with the queen mother, and the king, till their death, and joined them in all their exercises of piety and devotion. The winter they usually spent together: in spring, when the king put himself at the head of his army to march to new conquests, she usually assisted Berangera in superintending the domestic administration of the affairs of state. St Ferdinand, in the campaigns which followed the taking of Cordova, made himself master of twenty-four other towns, of which Ecija was the first, and Moron the last. Abenhudiel, king of Murcia, voluntarily surrendered his kingdom to king Ferdinand, reserving some open places to himself, and certain lords of his country, which they were to hold in vassalage: St Ferdinand sent his son Alphonsus to take possession of the city of Murcia, to purify the mosques, and establish there a bishopric. The strong cities of Lorca, Mula, and Carthagená, which refused to yield themselves up to him, he took three years after. Arjona and Jaën maintained obstinate sieges, but at length fell into the hands of Ferdinand, with Alcalá, Real, Ivorra, and some other places dependent on Jaën. The loss of this capital so terrified Benalhamar, king of Granada, that he repaired to the camp of Ferdinand, cast himself at the feet of the conqueror, and offered to hold his kingdom of him in vassalage, and to pay him an annual tribute of 150,000 Maravedis. These conditions were accepted, and, by remaining always faithful to king Ferdinand, he transmitted his kingdom to his posterity. The rich and strong city of Seville, after the death of its king Abenbut, had formed itself into a republic, when king Ferdinand resolved to turn his forces against that place, far the most important which the Moors at that time possessed in Spain. The death of archbishop Rodriguez, his most faithful minister, followed by that of Berangera, his mother, interrupted his preparations for a short time; but motives

(c) This daughter, named Eleanor, after the death of her father, was carried by her mother into France, became heiress of the counties of Ponthieu and Montreuil, and, by marrying Edward I. of England, united them to the dominions of that crown. See Trivet's Chron. &c.

of religion moderating his grief for the loss of the best of mothers. he had no sooner settled the administration by the orders which he dispatched into Castile, but he resumed his expedition with greater vigour than ever. The siege held sixteen months, Seville being then the largest and strongest city in Spain. Its double walls were very broad and high, and defended by 166 towers, the western side of the city was secured by the great river Guadalquivir, besides a deep broad moat at the foot of the innermost wall round the city. All provisions were abundantly supplied from the famous garden of Hercules, esteemed by the ancients the most delightful spot of ground in the world, called by the Moors Axarafa. This territory is about 30 miles in length, and 12 in breadth, and contained 100,000 farms, besides castles and towns. It lay on the right side of the river, where its communication with the city was secured by the castle of Triana, on that bank which was joined by a great iron chain, and a bridge of boats, with the golden tower on the opposite bank, at the bottom of the city. St Ferdinand's fleet defeated that of the Moors, and mounted the river within sight of the castle of Triana; his land forces vanquished the succours sent from Africa, and in daily combats gained continual advantages. Yet the siege was not advanced till in the 10th month, on the feast of the Invention of the Cross in May, Ferdinand's admiral, by launching two great ships upon the chain and bridge of boats, broke both. Triana was then besieged; and, after having been long battered with rams and other engines, and stood many assaults, was at length reduced. The city itself surrendered on the 23d of November 1249; the Moors were allowed a month to sell or dispose of their goods: 300,000 removed to Xeres, 100,000 passed into Africa. Axataf, governor-general of the Moors at Seville, being arrived at a hill called Belvedere, from which he had a prospect of the sea before him, and of the city behind him, turning toward Seville to take his last leave of that city, said with tears, that only a saint who, by his justice and piety had been in his interest in all his undertakings, could ever have taken so rich, so populous, and so strong a city with so small an army ; but that God by his eternal decrees had taken it from the Moors. St Ferdinand, after the most solemn thanksgivings to God, implored the intercession of the Virgin Mother before her famous image which is still preserved, and refounded the cathedral with such magnificence and splendour, that it yielded to no church in Christendom but that of Toledo. The three years which he survived he resided at Seville to settle the tribunals, and regulate the affairs of this important conquest ; but added at the same time to his dominions, Xeres, Medina, Sidonia, Alcala de los Gazules, Bejar, Port St Mary's, Cadiz, S. Lucar, Arcos, Lebrixa, Rota, Trebuxena, and a great number of other towns and castles. He shewed, by his example, that devotion is consistent with the duties of a king and Christian soldier : he was in all things severe to himself, but compassionate and mild to all others, always master of himself and his passions. He was preparing an expedition against the Moors in Africa, when he was taken with his last sickness. He prepared himself for death by the most edifying sentiments of compunction, and a general confession ; then called for the Viaticum : and whilst the bishop of Segovia, attended by all the clergy of Seville and the court, brought the holy sacrament, the king rose from his bed, fell on his knees on the floor, put a cord about his neck, and taking a crucifix in his hands, kissed and saluted the wounds of his Saviour, watering each of them with his tears. He then made his confession aloud, though he had nothing to accuse himself of which others could think to have been criminal, how much soever he was himself penetrated with confusion and regret for the least appearance of a fault. He made an act of faith in presence of the holy sacrament, which he received pouring forth a flood of tears of tender love and devotion. Before his death he called for all his children, gave them excellent instructions with his blessing, and asked pardon of all the world, if ever he had given offence to any. In his agony, holding a blessed taper in his hands, he recommended his soul to God, through the merits of his crucified Redeemer in the most pathetic aspirations : then caused the clergy to recite near him the Litanies, and afterwards the Te Deum. This was scarce finished when he calmly yielded up his soul into the hands of his Creator on the 30th of May, (a) in the year 1252, the fifty-third of his age, the 35th of his reign in Castile, and the twenty-second in Leon. According to his desire he was buried before the image of our Lady in the great church at Seville, and his body is still preserved in that church in a rich shrine, without the least blemish of corruption, and has been honoured with miracles. St Ferdinand was canonized by Clement X. in 1671. See the chronicle of Rodriguez Ximenes, archbishop of Toledo, high chancellor of Castile, and minister to St Ferdinand. This work ends in the year 1243, the 26th of St Ferdinand's reign. Also Luke, bishop of Tuy in Galicia, another cotemporary writer, whose chronicle ends in 1237, the 20th of St Ferdinand. Likewise the general chronicle of Spain, and the particular chronicle of St Ferdinand, compiled in the reign of his son and successor Alphonsus X. Add the notes of Papebroke, T. 7. Maij. Mariana de Rebus Hispaniæ, l. 12. c. 7, 9, 11, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17. l. 13. c. 1, 2, 3, 7, 8. and F. Orleans, Hist des Revolutions d'Espagne, T. 1. l. 3. p. 488, &c.

St MAGUIL, in Latin MADELGISILUS, Recluse in Picardy. He is said to have been a native of Ireland, and the inseparable companion of St Fursey, with whom he passed into France. After the death of that saint (who is honoured on the 16th of January) Maguil retired among the monks of St Riquier, whom

(d) Mariana and others place the death of St Ferdinand on the 30th of May ; but Flores shews that the Spaniards at that time called it the 31st. For May had 31 days where the Julian alteration of the months was not adopted, and the Dionysian epoch, in which the years were counted from Christ, was not introduced in Spain till very late, and after this time. The Spanish æra preceded it 38 years, commencing from the first year of Augustus's reign in Spain. Hence St Ferdinand died in the year of Christ 1252, of the Spanish æra 1290. See Flores, the learned Austin friar, rector of the Royal College at Alcalá, in his Espana Sagrada, upon Cronologia de la Historia de Espana, Part. 1. c. 6. p. 112. ib. c. 2. n. 52, 53. p. 36.

he exceedingly edified by his virtues: but fearing that the extraordinary veneration in which he was held, might expose him to the suggestions of pride, he, with the abbot's leave, hid himself in the solitude of Monstrelet, upon the river Authie, where he served God with new fervour in all the exercises of a contemplative life. Here he was visited by a holy English recluse, named Vulgan, (a) with whom he contracted a strict friendship, and they afterwards lived together for several years. The latter being seized with a mortal illness, endeavoured to comfort his companion, whose grief on the occasion was excessive: and exhorting him to have sentiments more becoming a Christian, "You should tremble," says he, "lest by this grief you offend God, and lose all the fruit of your labours." The abbot and monks of St Riquier being apprised of the situation of Vulgan, administered him the sacraments, and after his death buried him in the chapel of the hermitage. St Maguil survived him but a short time, having died about the year 685. His body was buried in the same tomb with that of his holy companion, but was afterward removed into a church of his name built near St Riquier. He is honoured on this day, which is supposed to be the day on which he died. See his life, written in the twelfth age by Hariulf, a monk of St Riquier, and published with remarks by Mabillon, Sec. 4. Bened. p. 2. It is also in the Bollandists, with the notes of Henschenius and Pabebroke.

M A Y XXXI.

ST PETRONILLA, V.

AMONG the disciples of the apostles, in the primitive age of saints, this holy virgin shone as a bright star in the church. She lived when Christians were more solicitous to live well than to write much: they knew how to die for Christ; but did not compile long books or disputations, (a) in which vanity has often a greater share than charity. Hence no particular account of her actions hath been transmitted down to us. But how eminent her sanctity was, we may judge from the lustre by which it was distinguished among apostles, prophets, and martyrs. Her name is the feminine and diminutive of Peter, and she is said to have been a daughter of the apostle St Peter: which tradition is confirmed by certain writings quoted by the Manichees in the time of St Austin, (1) which affirm that St Peter had a daughter whom he cured of a palsy. That St Peter was married before his vocation to the apostleship, we learn from the gospel; though St Jerom and other ancient fathers testify, that he lived in continency after his call. St Clement of Alexandria assures us (2), that his wife attained to the glory of martyrdom; at which that apostle himself encouraged her, bidding her to remember our Lord. But it seems not certain whether St Petronilla was more than the spiritual daughter of that apostle. She flourished at Rome, and was buried on the way to Ardea, where anciently a cemetery and a church bore her name; so famous that in it a station or place for the assembly of the city in public prayer, was established by Gregory III. She is commemorated in the true martyrology of Bede, in those which bear the name of St Jerom, &c.

(a) It is said by some writers that this Vulgan had been archbishop of Canterbury, but without foundation.

The saints, whether in sickness or in health, in public or in private life, devoted all their thoughts and actions to God, and thus sanctified all their employments. The great end for which they lived, was always present to their minds, and they thought every moment lost in which they did not make some advances towards eternal bliss. How will their example condemn at the last day the trifling fooleries, and the greatest part of the conversation and employments of the world, which aim at nothing but present amusements, as if it were the business of a rational creature to divert his mind from thought and reflection, and forget the only affair, the business of eternity.

(1) St Aug. 1. contra Adimant. c. 17. (2) Strom. 1. 7. p. 736.

(a) Sciebant mori, non sciebant disputare. St Cypr.

ON THE SAME DAY.

SS. CANTIUS and CANTIANUS brothers, and CANTIANILLA, their sister, MM. If riches are loaded with the curses of the gospel, because to many they prove dangerous, and afford the strongest incentives to the passions; the greater is their crown who make them the means of their sanctification. This circumstance enhances the glory of these holy martyrs. They were of the most illustrious family of the Anicii in Rome, and near relations to the emperor Carinus, who was himself a favourer of the Christians in Gaul. They were brought up together in their own palace in Rome, under the care of a pious Christian preceptor, named Protus, who instructed them in the faith, and in the most perfect maxims of our divine religion. When the persecution of Dioclesian began to fill Rome with terror, they sold their possessions in that city, and retired to Aquileia, where they had a good estate. The bloody edicts had also reached that country, and Sisinus, general of the forces, and Dulcidius, the governor of the province, were busied night and day in making the strictest search after Christians, and in filling the prisons with crowds of confessors. No sooner were they informed of the arrival of our saints, but they summoned them to appear and offer sacrifice, and at the same time by a messenger acquainted the emperor with what they had done, begging his instructions how they ought to proceed with regard to persons of their rank. Dioclesian sent an order that they should be beheaded, in case they refused to worship the gods. The martyrs had left Aquileia, in a chariot drawn by mules, but were stopped by an accident four miles out of the town at Aquæ-Gradatæ. Hither Sisinus pursued them, carrying with him the order of the emperor. He intreated and conjured them to comply; but they answered, that nothing should make them unfaithful to God, declaring that all who should worship idols, would be punished with everlasting fire. Wherefore they were all beheaded, together with Protus, their preceptor, in the year 304. Zoelus, a priest, honourably embalmed and buried their bodies in the same monument. The place hath since changed its name of Aquæ-Gradatæ for that of San-Cantiano. See their acts published genuine by Mabillon, in an appendix to his Gallican Liturgy, p. 467, and a panegyric, probably of St Maximus of Turin, extant among the sermons of St Ambrose, T. 2. Append. col. 458.

END OF VOLUME FIFTH.

44
2
JL

OCT 22 1934

